Pittsburgh Gazette.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 24.

"OUT OF THE WILDERNESS."

"John Brown's bones lie mouldering in the ground,
But his soul goes marching on.
Glory, glory hallelujah!"

Thank God! The one brave, needed, emphatic word has been spoken at last! Long expected and long coming, it is all the more welcome, now that it has come. How soul-cheering that word "free" looks, in the President's Proclamation—"That on the first day of January, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-three, all persons held as slaves within any State or designated part of a State, the people whereof shall then be in rebellion against the United States, shall be then, thenceforward and forever free!" It is for this that every earnest man in the land has been listening; and now that it has been spoken by the only voice that could give it potentiality, we not only rejoice at the realization of our hopes and the answer to our prayers, but we feel that it has marked a new era in the history of our nation and of the world. The men whose names are appended to the proclamation have signed the most important document in the world's history. Magna Charta is as nothing to it. It is, in fact, a new Magna Charta, before the light of which the other must pale its ineffectual fires.

Many have watched long and wearily for this decisive paper; others have grown despondent, fearing it would never come; while others, still, had abandoned all hope and settled into the conviction that it would never come. But, although the patience of all has been sorely tried, the President has adhered strictly to the line of policy publicly marked out for himself. On the 25th of July, he issued his proclamation preparatory to carrying into effect the Confiscation act. In that Proclamation he gave the rebels sixty days' grace in which to return to their allegiance. The sixty days expired on the 22d of September; and, promptly to the hour, he issues this new Proclamation giving full force and effect to the Confiscation Act, and directing all civil officers, and all officers of the army and navy to carry all its provisions fully into effect.

The result of this order is to give immediate freedom to all slaves who have come or may hereafter come into the lines of our army, or who may, now or hereafter, come under the control of the government of the United States. This is virtually an invitation to all slaves in the Rebel States to come within our lines and be immediately free. That thousands and tens of thousands will avail themselves of this grand invitation there can be no doubt. Heaven be praised! There is to be no more manhunting—no more returning of men to bondage!

But, while the President thus offers immediate emancipation to all who can hear and heed his voice, he announces that on the first of January next he will proclaim unconditional emancipation to every slave in every rebel State. We would much rather not wait so long for what, as it seems to us, might as well have been done at once; but we can afford to wait, and the President, doubtless, has good reasons for the delay. "Ye wheels of time, move swiftly on!" The glad day of the new year will soon be here, and millions of grateful souls will welcome its coming, as the dawn of the year of Jubilee. On that day, the Liberty Bell will ring out its sweet tones upon the air—"Proclaim Liberty throughout all the land, unto all the inhabitants thereof!" Happy day! Happy the nation to whom it is given to establish it!

We cannot now give utterance to all that we feel upon this subject. It is sufficient to add that we are rejoiced at the opportunity of chronicling this Proclamation. We thank the President most heartily for issuing it, and we thank God that we have lived to see it. A grateful people will stand by the President firmly in executing it, and all the more gladly that now they see the way clear to the final and utter extinction of the rebellion.

"The Black Brigade" at Cincinnati.

The Cincinnati papers inform us that the colored people, who, under the name above written, were engaged on the fortifications near that city, having completed their work, were disbanded on Saturday last. It will be remembered that the rowdy and semi-traitorous Mayor of Cincinnati, with his police, a set of ruffian myrmidons just suited to their employer, had insulted the colored people by arresting them like criminals, and drafting them into the service in the most brutal manner, till Gen. WALLACE put a stop to their outrageous proceedings, and assigned to JUDGE DICKSON the task of organizing the "Black Brigade," and directing their work on the fortifications across the river. This arrangement has been satisfactory all round, and when the Brigade had ended their labors on Saturday, so well were they pleased, that they presented a sword to their commander, Col. DICKSON, a companied by an address, highly suitable to the occasion, and eloquently and touchingly written withal. Col. DICKSON'S answer, as it contains both a testimony and a lesson, we think well to give in full:

Soldiers of the Black Brigade:

You have finished the work assigned to you upon the fortifications for the defense of the city. You are now to be discharged. You have labored faithfully. You have made miles of military roads, miles of rifle pits, felled hundreds of acres of the largest and loftiest forest trees, built magazines and forts. The hills across yonder river will be a perpetual monument of your labors. You have in no spirit of bravado, in no defiance of established prejudice, but in submission to it, intimated to me your willingness to defend with your lives the fortifications, that your kinds have built. Organized companies of men of your race, armed and equipped at their own expense, have tendered their services to aid in the defense of our city. In obedience to the policy of the Government the authorities have denied you this privilege. In the department of labor permitted, you have, however, rendered a willing and cheerful service. Nor has your zeal been dampened by the cruel treatment you have received. The citizens of both sexes have encouraged you with their smiles and words of approbation; the soldiers have welcomed you as co-laborers in the same great cause. But a portion of the police, ruffians in character, early learning that your offered services were accepted, and seeking to deprive you of the honor of a voluntary labor, before opportunity was given you to proceed to the field, rudely seized you in the streets, in your places of business, in your homes, everywhere, hurried you into pens and thence across the river to the fortifications, not permitting you to make any preparations for camp life. You have borne this with the accustomed patience of your race, and when, under more favorable auspices, you have received only the protection due to a common humanity, you have labored cheerfully and effectively. Go to your homes with the consciousness of having performed your duty, of deserving, if you do not receive, the protection of the law, and bearing with you the gratitude and respect of all honorable men. You have learned to suffer and to wait, but in your hours of adversity, remember that the same God who has numbered the hairs of our heads, and who watches over even the fate of a sparrow, is the God of your race as well as mine. The sweat blood which this nation is now shedding at every pore, is an awful warning of how fearful a thing it is to oppress the humblest being. Until our country shall again need your services, I bid you farewell.

SOMETHING SURPRISING.—MOSES W. COREY, a native of Boston, Mass., who lately made his escape from Petersburg, Va., among other interesting items of intelligence, which we have already noticed, says: "After the battle of Williamsburg the merchants of Petersburg, expecting an immediate successful advance of our army upon Richmond, which had no adequate force for defence, rolled their tobacco down to the river bank and made general arrangements to destroy their merchandize. From this time, however, while our army was intrenching in the Peninsula, conscript forces began pouring into Richmond by thousands, an average of five thousand a day passing through Petersburg from North Carolina, aggregating some forty thousand in all; it was a subject of surprise to the rebels that we did not seize the railroad over which they passed, thus cutting off those supplies of new troops."

It is perhaps better, for the present at least, to avoid all references to that strategic abortion of somebody's generalship, the Peninsula campaign. But the rebels of Petersburg are neither the first, nor are they likely to be the last, of the un-military critics, to be "surprised" by the preference shown for the York river and the Chickahominy swamps, as a base of operations against Richmond, over the James river, and the higher, drier and healthier country along its banks, especially that on its south side, through which access was open, to an enterprising commander, to the most important railways southward, by which not only troops, but all manner of supplies reached the rebel capital. Possibly, what so greatly surprised the unmilitary critics of Petersburg, (who, as rebels, doubtless, very much enjoyed the feeling—that is, felt what is called a pleased surprise in it)—the same will no less surprise other critics, both military and unmilitary, as long as it stands recorded among historical facts in the annals of our country.

Our Soldiers in the Late Battles.

In none of the reports of last week's battles in Maryland, or the correspondence from the field, are there any of those accusations of misbehavior on the part of individual regiments, or brigades, or officers of any grade, that have frequently sullied the reports of previous battles. Every regiment seems to have done its duty to the death—none flinching; every General and subordinate officer appears to have honored his rank. The applause for valor, endurance, and patience, were merited by every man wearing the Nation's uniform.

It must be remembered that this unflinching, victorious Union army was composed of the fever-wasted, battle-decimated, retreating regiments of McClellan, which left the Peninsula a few weeks ago; of the shattered regiments and brigades of Pope, which arrived in Washington twenty days since in a condition bordering upon demoralization; and, added to these, new recruits who had never before faced fire. This was the material which achieved such great deeds last week—which drove back superior numbers of rebel veterans, and vanquished them on three fields. We have more confidence in our army now than ever. Good leadership, active movements, and fighting on the offensive, are all that it now needs, or ever needed, for victory.—N. Y. Times.

ANOTHER WARNING TO TRAVELERS.—People in travelling take little heed to their pockets. Two thieves take seats in a railroad train; enter into conversation loud enough to be heard all through the car. One thief personates a "returned prisoner," or a wounded officer, and at once all ears are intent in listening to his narrative. While this is going on a confederate plies his art in picking the pockets of the people whose attention is absorbed in another direction. Coming from Washington to Philadelphia on Tuesday night, Judge Black, ex-United States Attorney General, was robbed of $3,000. The haul is the largest made from a single pocket in a long period. He cannot tell at what point he lost the money. It is morally certain, however, that having secured his booty, the thief got off the train at the next station. Havre-de-Grace is the headquarters of the railroad thieves. Between there and Wilmington they ride upon every train. They are shy of Baltimore, but between the two cities they make splendid hauls. Only a few nights ago $3,000, in the aggregate, was taken from a single train. Judge Black will probably be compelled to submit to his loss.—Baltimore American.

WATER-PROOF CLOTH is produced by the simple process of passing the cloth through a hot solution of glue and alum. A weak solution of glue is made, and while it is hot, two ounces of alum to the gallon is added and dissolved. Cloth may then be wrung through the solution and dried, when it cannot be wet through by rain, which trickles off without being absorbed. Finer woolen goods may be sponged with the hot solution, first on the inside, and then in the direction, of the nap, upon the outside. It must be thoroughly dried, first in the air, and then in a hot room. A small quantity of soap added to the solution makes the cloth much softer. Cloth made water-proof in this way will resist the effects of water, even if it is somewhat warm, but boiling removes the preparation.

THE ATTACK.—Our army is always victorious when it is the attacking party. The battles of Gen. McClellan last week are the first for a long time in which we have assumed the offensive. In the battles on the Peninsula we were always on the defensive; in Gen. Pope's battles in Virginia, he was on the defensive. In the West, in the battle at Shiloh, and in other instances of ill-success or dubious success, we were on the defensive; whilst at Donelson and other glorious fields, we were the attacking party. In the victory of Rosecrans over Price, just reported, the Union officer was on the offensive. And a hundred other examples and illustrations might be found. Our success is always in the attack.

SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.—It is a curious coincidence that the recent battle took place on the 17th of September—the very day on which, seventy-five years ago, the constitution of the United States was signed and adopted.

GEN. BANKS' BROTHER KILLED.—Lieut. Hiram Banks, brother of Major-General N. P. Banks, was killed in the battle of Saturday week. He was a writer of ability and a most eloquent orator.

AMONG the fruits of Gen. Rosecrans' victory at Iuka were six batteries and 500 prisoners, including the rebel general, Whitfield. —Gen. Rosecrans is likely to be made a Major General of Volunteers.

WRITING FLUID—as good as any; perhaps better. In our judgment, SMITH & BROWNELL'S WRITING FLUID has no superior. Prejudice aside, we hazard nothing in presenting this beautiful fluid to the community. We speak from experience. Why send $50 to $5,000 to Europe, annually, for gratuitous prejudice in favor of a foreign article? Give it a trial and you will want no better fluid. Price and quality will commend it.
