Pittsburgh Gazette.

MONDAY MORNING, SEPT. 29. The Coming Election. Let not the true friends of the Union forget that they have important duties to perform at home as well as in the field. there are those amongst us who would chain us to the chariot wheels of slavery again if they could-men who profess some real for the Union, a great deal for the Constitution; but who at the same time are doing all that men can do to embarrass and hamper the government in its terrible struggle for life. The Democrats have but little expectation of carrying this county; but they are really hopeful of carrying the 28d Congressional district, and are glorying, exthose who have gone to serve their country as colunteers are Republicans, and that they will thus be enabled to command a majority. Shameful as the fact is to them, it is power of our diminished numbers.

Democrats who will turn away in disgust from a banner that has led the entire Southern wing to treason, and which even here is prestituted to the vile purpose of rendering aid and comfort to the enemies of their country, and give a cordial support to the eloquent, fearless and incorruptible Williams, whose words will be hurled like hot shot alike into the ranks of traitors and corrupt jobbers. This is just latest mountebank performance: the time to send men to Congress who authority or not.

If his acts were necessary to the defense of the country, that necessity was above all law. Gen. Jackson hazarded every-thing; he hazarded both life and reputathing; he hazarded both life and repuisation on that step, which might render him immortal if he saved the country, or on the contrary, make him ignominous, and a by-word and a represch; and the man that dared to do that deserved the protection and plaudits of his country. He did not envy the feelings of that man who could envy the feelings of that man who could envy the feelings of that man who could be the country and all calmir and could under the country of the c get up and talk calmly and coolly, under such circumstances, about rules af court and technicalities of proceedings, when the city might be in fismes, and the utmost barbarity might be committed. What were barbarity might be committed. What were rules of court but mere cobwebs when they heard an enemy with his cannon at the doors of their courts, and the fames encircling the cupols? Talk then about the rules of court, and the formalities of proceedings? The man that would ide this, would fiddle while the capital was burning. (Sensation.) He could not entry any man the possession of such stoical philosophy. Talk about illegality! Talk about illegality! Talk about illegality! Talk about formalities! Why, there was but one formality to be observed, and that was the fermality of directing the cannon, and destroying the enemy, regardless of the means, whether it be by the seisure of cotton bags, or the seisure of persons, if the necessity of the case required it. The God of nature has conferred this right on men. and nations; and, therefore, let him not be told that it was unconstitutional. To defend the countity, let him not be told that it was unconstitutional to use the necessary means. The constitutional was adoncted for the many representation. He constitution. For he has no constitution power to issue this proclamation of emancipation—none whatever. The constitution for bids it is the president has no authority not derived from the constitution—none whatever. He constitution—none whatever. He is the instrumentality by which abolitonism has undertaken that the war should be closed in thirty days at the farthest. Indeed, we have been told that it was unconstitutional to use the necessary means. The constitution of the constitution. For he has no constitution. For he has no constitution for emancipation—none whatever. He constitution—none whatever. He constitution for the constitution for the constitution for the constitution for the constitution. For he has no constitution are the formality of the constitution of the constitution and the president has no authority not derived from the constitution.

Some time after the delivery of the fine argument from which we have quoted, Mr. at the Hermitage. "Douglas?" said Jack. freedom." suspension of the writ of habeas corpus the had given him more peace of mind by the people's money—and one of that argument than any other man had ever given him. He said he knew he was right in what he did on that occasion, but had never been able logically to prove that he was constitutionally and legally right. This, he said, Douglas had done. We This, he said, Douglas had done. We write from memory, not having the work at hand, but we know that we are substantially correct. Well, if Jacksen was

They will find it very wholesome reading:

The necessity and the glorious effect resulting from the cause which that necessity prompted, were schnowledged by the whole country, and he would even say by the whole civilised world. Then, as far as this bill was concerned, he (Mr. D.) could not asy whether their acts were legal or illegal. He cared not whether Gen. Jackson violated the constitution or not. He cared not whether Gen. Jackson suspended all civil authority or not.

to stamp armies out of the earth. Let him stamp at once, for we are anxious to see the flaming giants of abolitionism throwing themselves into the fight and driving rebellion in dismay before them, as promised. We are anxious to behold the stupendous and magnificent results which were to flow, like a mighty stream, from the proclamation. Surely we shall not be utterly and totally deceived as to these results.

This second edition of Barnum has returned from Europe, and is now Barnumising through the Eastern cities, from Boston to Washington, on the large stock of notoriety he has been laying in for a year or more, by his performances abroad. These, indeed, have been exceedingly varied, both in kind and character—having ranged from the platform of the lecture room and the platform of the lecture room and the platform of the lecture room and the platform of the debating club, to the witness-box of the law-court and even to the sponging-house, where a person arrested for debit may sojourn under the care of a bailiff.

But wherever he has been, his bearing and language have always abeen singularly extrawagant and unbecoming, as he strained after his great object, to make a sensa.
