TUESDAY MORNING, SEPT. 80.

The Hughes "Democracy" --- Its We have already discoursed of the reawakening of the counterfeit Democracy, and given our readers notice of its newborn hopes-its mortuary register-its calculations of the number of our dead and absent heroes—and its deep laid plans for rising upon and over-mastering the garrison at home catching us asleep, it may be, and strangling us in our beds, while so many of our brave defenders are out to meet, in fair and open battle, the rebel Breckinridge and all the other quondam against this government, and have left these, their humble servitors, to do the

That we are not mistaken in this particular, is evidenced by the fact that they should have thought it worth while to import all the way from the Schuylkill, two such windy orators as those who harangued the crowd in front of the St. Charles. a few evenings ago, to blow up the dead embers of the party, and assist them in capturing the very stronghold of the Administration, with its ten thousand majority of 1860. While these little emissaries—these mere carpet knights—were telling the people here that it was the Democratic party that was fighting our battles, their very as it is." presence and business here were giving the lie to the assertion. If they had not honestly believed that the ten thousand men ranks, they would scarcely have ventured is to reconstruct the party for the sake of in the first instance, as the war of the Re- and Breckinridge, and Floyd, and Davis, the power of a name-by the old battle cry the party slogan of the Democracy. Thank God! they reckoned without their host—the clausmen of the impetuous and fiery Douglas despised the traitors as he did himself, and turned their affectionate regard-not on the infamous Stars and Bars but upon the Stars and Stripes-the clorious banner of their country, which many of them have followed so heroically brough so many bloody fields. But we have a word to say in regard to the aims and objects of these men-their process of argumentation, and the ruinous asequence of their success in obtaining indancy, if that was possible, in the ouncils of the nation. What, then, is the object of the revival of that organisation at the present time? The effect of the rebellion is necessarily to adjourn indefinitely, if it does not definitively settle the question at issue between the great parties which previously divided the on. The rebellion was the work of the Democratic leaders, and carried with it, in

took with it one-third of Heaven's Host, it fell far short of this. It was in fact a rebellion, not of States, but of the whole Southern wing of the Democratic party, which, holding, as it did, the whole govermental machinery of the Southern States, will endeavor to give a plain, unvanished statement of such facts as I may be possessed of confining myself as strictly as possible, to the precise language used at the time. mental machinery of the Southern States, was enabled, by a system of fraud and terrorim, to draw along with it—to compel, as it were, into its embrace, all that was sacred and loyal in those States. Nor was it without supporters in the North. It was countenanced and encouraged—nay, it owes its very origin to the support which it received amongst ourselves. As early as the Cincinnati Convention of 1856, it was publicly announced by a delegate from this State, and county, that in the event or a separation, which was then obviously contamplated as a probable thing, the State Co., of South Carolina, as commissioners, incontemplated as a probable thing, the State of Pennsylvania would be found on the side of the South. When South Carolina actually secesded from the Union, another Pennsylvanian was found, not in the permanylvanian was found to state of distinguished citizens, and treat with them upon the subject of their missioners, in the did not receive Messrs. Rhett & Co., of South Carolina, as commissioners, in stead of distinguished citizens, and treat with them upon the subject of their mission, the permanylvanian was found, not in the permanylvanian was found to state of the permanylvanian was found to state of the subject of their mission. pennsylvanian was found, not in the person only of her "favorite son," who stripped us of our arms, and refused to lifts hand in defence of the nation—but of the Attorney General of the United States—the law adviser of the Government—to an accommondate on the resume direction. I took occasion to mention to him the law adviser of the Government—to announce authoritatively that coercios under the Constitution was impossible, while the Hugheses, and the Witter, and all the Northern satellites of the alsve power, shouted amen! This war is obviously a part of the programme; and we venture to say that there was not one Breckinridge Democrat amongst us who did not respond in the same manner.

But for the encouragement thus afforded throughout the North been no rebellion. There was no Democrat in the South who would have been no rebellion. There was no Democrat in the South who would have ventured on so desperate an experiment but for the assurance that the North would at least divide, and the Northern democrats join hands with the aristocrats of the South. It is to these gentlemen, therefore, that we are indebted for our present calamities. The their hands, and that the Republican party, which received from them, only two years ago, such an inheritance of ruin, is unfit to govern it. They point you, too, as evidence of this, to the fact that the army is full of Democratic Generals and Colonels, and that Lincoln and Curtin have both found it necessary to employ them almost exclusively. If the fact be so it will serve, relation to your queries, and is given in exclusively. If the fact be so it will serve, relation to your queries, and is given in the fact be so it will serve.

The Butternut Democracy does not want to fight. Its policy has always been to proassociates and sworn political brethren of order that it may use that unpopularity as those same variets, who are now in arms a means of getting into power anew. This is the peace which these men will bring you, if you are unwise enough to trust them again. It will be no peace but Francis W. Hughes. We earnestly invite the attention of all honest and patriotic Democrats to the fact stated by our special Philadelphia correspondent, that this man, who is Chairman of the Democratic State Committee, (so called,) was prominent in a conspiracy to unite Pennsylvania with the rebel States, in 1861.
