Bad Company.

It is well known that many of the leaders of the so-called Democratic party in the North, such as F. W. Hughes, the chairman of the Central Committee of that party in this State, and author of the address to the Democracy of Pennsylvania, Vallandigham, of Ohio, and many other prominent men of that party, are in sympathy with the rebels, and render them as much aid and comfort as they dare to do. The party machinery is completely in the hands of the Breckenridge wing of the party, as is clearly proved by the fact that such men as we have named occupy the positions they do.

Men are judged by the company they keep, and not by their mere professions. A man may be perfectly loyal, but if he deliberately allies himself with men who are not so, what good does his loyalty do either to himself or to his country? And if, by his vote, he assists in giving a triumph to a party led by such men, does he not, to that extent, render "aid and comfort to the enemy," which is the legal definition of treason. Suppose James P. Barr should be elected Surveyor General of Pennsylvania, under such leadership as his party has just now in this State, what inference would the rebels of the South draw from the fact? Would they ask whether Mr. Barr was loyal or disloyal? By no means; but they would take it for granted that he was their friend, because he was found among their friends; for it is perfectly fair and logical to judge a man by the company he keeps. His election, therefore, would give them no little aid and comfort in the shape of hope and encouragement. The logical sequence of the whole matter may be briefly stated thus: 1. Mr. Barr's election would raise the hopes of the rebels in arms, and hope in such cases is aid and comfort. 2. Rebels in arms are enemies to the country, and all who render them aid and comfort are guilty of treason in the legal sense of that term. 3. Ergo: every voter who shall cast a ballot for Mr. Barr will be guilty of treason. This is truly a pretty predicament into which to bring a party; but the party of which we are speaking has been brought to that predicament by suffering itself to be led and controlled by such men as Hughes, Witte, Wm. B. Reed and G. W. Wharton, of this State, Vallandigham, Olds, White and others of Ohio, and soon throughout the entire North; and loyal Democrats, who think of supporting their party ticket, be the individual candidates what they may, are in bad company. What we have said of Mr. Barr is equally applicable to Messrs. Hamilton, Zeigler, Dawson, Lazear and other nominees for Congress; for there is not a man among them whose election would not greatly encourage the traitors in arms, and cause Richmond and Charleston to ring with shouts of joy.

We have said that loyal democrats, who still adhere to their treason-stained party, are in bad company; and for this reason thousands have indignantly turned their backs upon it, prominent among whom are ex-Gov. Boutwell, of Massachusetts, Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island, Gov. Tod, of Ohio, Judge Jewett and Wm. Allen of the same State; Gov. Wright and Hon. Robert Dale Owen, of Indiana; Dickinson, Tremain and Busteed, of New York; Judge Shannon of this city, Judge Champneys, of Lancaster, and the Muhlenbergs, of Berks. These are democrats in the true sense of that word, and we cannot doubt but that the approaching election will prove that their company is a very large one, as it certainly is a very good one.

Buell's Inefficiency.

It is said that there are about two hundred thousand Union troops in Kentucky, under the command of BUELL, yet BRAGG was suffered to march entirely through the State, almost under the nose of BUELL, with about forty thousand rebel troops, without receiving a single blow. BUELL, with his immense army, is now lying at Louisville, taking care of it, after all danger is past, if, indeed, there ever was any, while BRAGG is sweeping through the richest portions of Kentucky, marauding on an enormous scale, with none to make him afraid. While BUELL is still guarding Louisville, BRAGG may turn up at Wheeling, or some where else, when we shall have some more man-killing marches, to end, as the last did, at some place which the enemy has either plundered and abandoned, or has not been at at all.

A private soldier of the 17th Ohio, in a letter to the Cincinnati Commercial, says:

After the Corinth affair, Buell had command along the Memphis and Charleston Railroad, from Corinth to Chattanooga. And if anything was accomplished, beyond allowing thousands of our men to be overpowered and captured by the enemy at different points, it has yet to be made public. It was well known by the citizens, and made public by Southern journals, that the rebels were concentrating and organizing a large army but a few miles south of Chattanooga, and our lines extended at that time southward to Stevenson. But were measures taken to break up that encampment? No. And a few weeks ago General Bragg left there with a mighty force, and, notwithstanding our force was sufficient for any emergency, yet now he is within a few miles of this city. When the present month set in we were in Southern Tennessee. A portion of our division was at this place, at Stevenson, and were hurried back over the mountains, compelled to burn all their tents, blankets, and equipage. And from this time forward up to the present hour, Gen. Buell's conduct has undoubtedly been strange. Who can explain why it was that he halted his army at Bowling Green and compelled us to sit almost within hearing of the cannon, while the brave Col. Wilder was surrounded and captured by Bragg's whole command?

The conduct of BUELL, in suffering Col. WILDER to be overpowered and compelled to surrender, was quite as cowardly or treacherous (his friends, if he has any, may choose either term) as was the recent surrender of Harper's Ferry; and yet General HALLECK has not called him to account for it, but, at last accounts, still retained him in command. The account given by the private soldier is in all essential particulars in agreement with other accounts, including that of Col. WILDER himself.

BRAGG's expedition, from Alabama almost to the Ohio river, was not a campaign, but a raid. He did not come to fight, but to forage; yet he drove BUELL, with his immense army, before him two hundred miles, without a gun being fired on either side. What intense contempt the rebels must feel for such an army! and how will such warfare appear in the eyes of the people of Europe, where the mysterious power of pro-slaveryism is not understood? The men who fought at Donaldson and Shiloh will be stigmatized as poltroons, and all because of the atrocious conduct of one man; and yet that man has not been removed. Truly a West Point diploma can cover more sins than even Charity itself.

Apropos of Key.

MAJOR KEY, whom the President has just dismissed for his unguarded remarks about a certain programme, which up to the time of the late proclamation of emancipation, was the only plan and shaping of a policy of the war to be heard of, or even imagined, in "well-informed" circles, illuminated by the star-light of West-Point Generals,—this same Major KEY, we are reminded by a contemporary, was charged with disloyalty many months ago. The charges that were then made, were of the most positive character, and were circumstantially set forth, first, we believe, in an Evansville (Ind.) paper, and thence extensively copied by the press throughout the country. But there was no ear of any one in authority open, and a denounced traitor was suffered to remain in a most important position, down to the time of his late unguarded remark, as we have before called it, which chanced to be reported to the President, and very properly led to his dismissal at last.

How much injury, in the meantime, may this man have done, placed, as he was, where he could ply the vocation of a spy with such advantage, in the interest of those open traitors with whose rebellion he, a secret traitor, was in closest and most friendly sympathy!

But, individually, Major KEY is of little account. As a spy, to be sure, he was dangerous—and we might well ask, whether this lenient dealing, of punishing an officer under such a charge with mere dismission, is likely to redound to the safety and welfare of the Government and the Nation, in such a crisis as the present?

We rather use the circumstance, in a sense suggested by the name of the offender, as a key to the secret of that order to which the Major belonged, and of whose programme of the war his foolish tongue wagged so unguardedly.

That such a programme as Major KEY spoke of, has been known to be in existence—and not only so, but has been acted upon in the conduct of the war by the greater number of our Generals highest in command—a whole series of converging lines, both of facts and arguments, prove almost beyond controversy.

That this thrice accursed programme has cost the nation already more than a hundred thousand lives of brave men sacrificed in vain, and an expenditure of treasure that must be counted by hundreds of millions, equally indisputable facts and arguments, with their converging lines of proof, establish.

That this life-destroying programme was the sole work of that combination of West-Point generals and Border-State "conservatives," the Kentucky cabal of back-stairs privy-counsellors, who once dared to attempt to become, and for a while actually believed themselves to be, "the power behind the throne, more powerful than the throne itself," is proved by the unquestionable fact that both these parties have from the very first taken sweet counsel together, and acted the role of military inaction, in their several assigned parts, with an accord and mutual defense of one another, so perfect, so complete, so uninterrupted, that nothing short of the influence of an understood and pre-arranged plan could have secured such a unity of purpose and concerted movement of these military and political factions on all the questions that have arisen.

And now we would add a final proposition, which we trust will be equally susceptible of proof within a very short time—for if so, the above propositions, embodying so many humiliating and lamentable facts, will no longer have the importance they now have. It is:

That this dismissal of Major KEY is one of the first signs of a COUNTER-PROGRAMME which the President has determined shall change the policy of the war, and of the generals who are to carry it on—as well as of the Government in dealing with both—to the extent that the policy of the war must be a war-policy, and that the generals whose programmes are different, must follow Major KEY into retirement as soon as they are discovered either by word or deed.

We think the President did express his abhorrence of the West-Point programme in the dismissal of Major KEY; but we had much preferred to have seen him dismiss some of the generals who wickedly and traitorously adopted that programme, and have so long followed it out at the peril of the very life of the Nation, and at the actual cost of the lives of so many thousands of her best and bravest sons, than to have seen what we have seen—the dismissal of a subordinate officer who merely described what his superiors had been actually doing, and what, in his opinion, they would continue to do.

The Commander.

All men who have lately made the journey to Washington return with the conviction that Old Abe is the master of the situation, and that as such he is in danger of no interference with his legitimate authority. The stories that Generals are forced upon him against his will, and that he is powerless in the hands of the Cabinet are the result of misinformation or bad design. Mr. Lincoln is the captain!

So testifies our respected contemporary, the Chicago Tribune. If we could believe that an honest man, like Mr. LINCOLN, had got the whip-hand of West Point generalship, and his foot firmly planted on the neck of Washington corruption and treason, we should rejoice, and look for a good time coming. But we fear that the words of Luther to Melancthon are too applicable at Washington, and that Mr. LINCOLN has not yet even found out some of the devices of Satan there, much less got the mastery over them.

Halleck and McClellan.

The Washington correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes:

There are signs that the accord between Gen. Halleck and McClellan is coming to an end. The old question whether the Peninsular army should have been withdrawn from Harrison's Landing is again brought under discussion by the opponents of that policy. Vexation is also not unnaturally felt at the escape of the rebel army across the Potomac, and there is discussion as to where the blame lies. On the one hand, it is argued that but for Gen. McClellan's proverbial caution, he might have attacked the enemy on the morning after the battle of Antietam, and put him to rout; that he should have been in a position to know whether the cloud of dust noticed on that day, in the enemy's rear, rising from the road that led to the Potomac meant retreat or reinforcement; that, indeed, he might have won a far more decided victory on the Antietam, had he brought up his forces more rapidly or had he, after the fall of Gen. Hooker, put himself at the head of the right wing and achieved the result which Gen. Hooker meditated, leaving Gen. Burnside to press the enemy on the left and Gen. Porter to support him and to hold the centre. On the other hand, Gen. McClellan's friends say that his plans were seriously disarranged by the fall of Harper's Ferry, for which he was in no sense responsible; that he urged the withdrawal of Col. Miles and, failing that, urged the sending to his support of Gen. Sigel; that Gen. Halleck failed to reinforce him as he might have done, while suffering thousands of troops to lie idle and useless, here, at Baltimore and in the East; that, particularly, Gens. Heintzelman and Sigel should have been sent up the Virginia bank of the Potomac to cut off the rebel retreat from Sharpsburg, if they could not prudently have been sent in time to save Harper's Ferry; that 80,000 troops could have been detached for the purpose under those generals, who were anxious to go and still amply enough men left behind to garrison the forts, if that was thought necessary after it had been ascertained by thorough reconnoissances that there was no considerable body of rebels between Gordonsville and Harper's Ferry.

To all who desire it, he will send a copy of the prescription used (free of charge,) with the directions for preparing and using the same, which they will find a sure cure for Consumption, Asthma, Bronchitis, &c. The only object of the advertiser in sending the prescription is to benefit the afflicted, and spread information which he conceives to be invaluable, and he hopes every sufferer will try his remedy, as it will cost them nothing, and may prove a blessing.

GOOD CIDER,
ALL THE YEAR ROUND.
The Sulphite of Lime (not sulphate,) has become a standard article in preserving Cider. When failures occurred, they have been due to using powder sold as sulphite of lime which was an imitation. The true article is for sale in bottles, containing just enough for one barrel, or in any quantities that may be desired, by
