A very large and respectable meeting of Republicans and Union Democrats was held last evening, in front of the Custom House. A splandidbrass hand was in attendance, and before the meeting organised about two thouse and persons were present, which subsequently swelled to between three and four thousand were not present in time to hear the other officers announced.

Hon. George Wilson, Ex-Mayor, presided, but we were not present in time to hear the other officers announced.

Hon. John W. Forney did not arrive in the city, and hence those who desired to hear thm ware necessarily disappointed.

Hon. J. K. Moorhead was called on, and although he makes no pretamions to stamp speaking, he promptly responded; and we must say, he made a very able, practicula, bulling speech. He refrained from any effort at rantoric, but his logic was sound and incontroversible. He dedged none of the questions at tasse, but freely canvessed them all, in a plain common sense, mater-of-fact way. He gave his opponent Mr. Hamilton, a pretty severe "heckling," in reply to a very unmanally and uncalled for personal attack. The position of Hughes, Witts, Barr, and their ocalitators of the Breckinridge school; was placed in a clear and forcible light before the Enthusiastic Mass Meeting. city, and hance those who desired to hear him were necessarily disappointed.

Dr. George McCook, Sr., being observed in the crowd, was vociferously called upon, and took the stand amidst loud applause. He desired his position in a few words. He always had been and was now a Democrat, and hald to the motto—"The Country right or wropg." But he had no fellowship with the traitorous, deceilful politicisms of the Hughes and Witte school. He voted for eld Abe Lincoln, because of the currention of the Democratic of the Country of the Democratic of the Democ coin, because of the corruption of the Demo-cratic leaders, who sold out the Douglas wing to the Breckinridge conspirators. He was o the Breckinridge conspirators. He s a favor of the Emancipation Proclamati and every other measure calculated to defea and subjugate the robels. He was frequently interrupted by blackguards, who skulked of the outskirts of the meeting, in the darks: them, and gave one or we used of them and the impalatable character.

Thomas M. Marshall, Eq., being observed, was vocificrously called on, and took the stand. His politics, and his sentiment in reference to the conduct of the war, are well known, as he is one of that positive class of most who, whether in private or in public, cannot disguise their opinions. He is always on one side or the other of every question, and never fails to speak his convictions. in the afternoon, we started for Harper's Ferry in an army wagon going there for supplies of some kind. I may here note that a chariot of this sort is the severest of rough conveyances: We were overtaken by night, to everhung with clouds of inky darkness. We stopped our-wagon on the top of a hill, where the road was bread enough to allow the other wagons to pass, and detailing one of my squad to accompany me, started on a voyage of discovery. We plunged and pitched down the steepest of hills, guided by instinct, and not by sight, for half a mile, and finally halted at the end of a bayonet in the hands of a guard. This specimen of a wicked generation demanded a sign, or countersign, and the difficulty with us was that we had no countersign to give. The officer of the guard was called, who instructed the soldier to hold his gun at us in a more determined and convenient manner—evidently being, in his sight, the objects of intense suspicion. Our papers were examined, but wouldn't pass. We remonstrated, explained that we were wet through the rain, to our wagon, and reported. Solwly and sadly we retraced our steps, through the rain, to our wagon, and reported. Satherland thereupon became helpiessly side.—the result of his experience as a three months' man—and another of our squad, also played the old soldier to excape the work. So Mr. Head and myself went to work to provide supper, which we did in style. While at the product of the provide supper, which we did in style. up the line of pursuit for Ben's capital quarters. We were soon again with friends. The next morning early we started with Capitaln Morgan and Corps Commissary D. I. Smith, of our city, who is pronounced by all to be the mostefficient in the service, for Knap's Battery, where we found Lieuts. McGill and Dunlevy, and a host of Alloghen's boys, by whom we were handsomely received, mounted and escorted to Maryland Heights. I cannot stop longer to tell you of all we saw and heard, but some items of interest I will fernish you with when I return.

Our party were greatly pleased with Gen, Williams, who is a very pleasant gentleman. In his report of Antietam, he speaks highly of Ben. Morgan for galantry. Capit Morgan has, in every bervice in which he has taken part, distinguished himself. The officers of the other regiments also speak finely of Lieut. McGill, who is pronounced game all over.
