The wounded of the battle-field are incontrated, as it were, in the smallest possible compass, that their sufferings may be the more readily alleviated; but strange as it may appear, they are too often left to suffer although the means for their relief are abundalthough the means for their relief are abundant. There are now four thousand sick and wounded soldiers lying in and around Frederick, Md., almost on the border of our own great and prosperous State, and yet they stand in need of the commonest articles of comfort—diannel shirts, drawers, sooks, etc., without which their recovery will be slow and uncertain. The same may be said of thousands of soldiers in other hospitals, and those of our readers who have the means for contributing to their relief, can employ those means officiently through the Pittsburgh Subsistence Committee, now hadly in need of cash to prepay freight, and purchase articles which are needed. Read the following extracts of letters just received by the Committee:

The indictment was drawn under the Penal Code, but defendants' counter (Messrs, Mackerell and Petterman) held that the charge should have been burglary, leaving the jury to determine, upon the evidence, whether the offense was complete, or whether it was but an "attempt." It was admitted that "attempted burglary" was an offense at common law, but then another difficulty presented itself—it was a store, and not a duelling, grapon which the attempt was made, and the offense would be but house-breaking. The indictment, in either view, seems defective, and it is questionable whether the defendants can be sentenced under the verdict.
