The Washington Republican, of Baturday, agraph from a leading article in the New says:

The railroad from Alexandria to Warrenton is in fair working order, and the forwarding of supplies to the army is being pushed to the sitmost.

The country about Warrenton furnishes supplies in a manner which will be perfectly surprising to those who have talked about starving out the South. The army clique, which is now depend, resisted a meyement upon Richmond's year ago, upon the ground that an advancing army "must sarry along with it every pound of forage needed for its animals." At the very time they said this, and mow at this day, after another year of war, hay can be bought in indefinite quantities within to miles of Warrenton, at from thirteen to fitteen dollars per ton, or at two thirds what it costs the dovernment to buy it here.

A successive beginning and who has bried it, writes with regard to advertising: "Give no can we, any more, do so with traitors."

A successive beginning and the forwarding of the kind in this conflict in the supplies, and now at this day, after another year of war, hay can be bought in indefinite quantities within ten miles of Warrenton, at from thirdeen to fifteen dollars per ton, or a two and the dollars per ton, or at two thirdeen to fifteen deliced to the independent of the war rages.
