Charles T. Hays, son of the late Thomas Hays, of the Fifth Ward, died in the hospital Hays, of the Fifth Ward, died in the hospital at Georgetown, D. C., on the 19th inst., from disease contracted in the Peninsula campaign. Young Hays enlisted immediately after the breaking out of the war, and served in the three months campaign in Western Virginia. Returning home, he soon after re-enlisted "for the war," enrolling his name as a pri-vate in Capt. Tanner's company, and serving with it until it became disorgarized, when he was transferred to the 23d Pennsylrania regi-ment, under Colonel Birney. The hard-ships and expours of the Peninsula were too savere for his constitution, and his health gave way—the soat of the disease being the wrote to a friend that his condition was well-known to the doctor, and prominent friends had endeavored to get him a discharge, but he had no hope they would succeed. By way of explanation, he adds, "if the doctor would pay less attantion to drinking whisky and playing eards, I might have some hope of get-ting home." He had only been in the hospi-ties does show to bim immediately, as he was dying. She started at once, but he was desd helore she reached him. His friends, knowing his condition, were very anxious to secure his discharge, and they have no hesita-tion in asyling that he foll a victim to "red taps." The decease was about twenty-one years of The decease was about twenty-one years of age, and a young man of more than ordinary promise. Had he desired it, he might have readily obtained promotion, but his patriotism was of that ardent character which looked only at the musket, and did not wait to cal-culate on the rank or emclument of office. His death will be sincerely regretted by a large circle of friends. His body is expected to arrive here on Saturday night. Due notice will be given of the funeral.

On Friday night last a party of soldiers from Carlisle Barracks, who had been imhibing very freely, visited a bawdy house, kept by a negro man by the name of Abe Bell. On arriving at the house they found the door looked and all admittance therein refused them. They then attempted to epen the door by force in which they were successful, but no sooner had the door been opened, than a shot from a horse pistol was fired into the party, which took effect on two of them. One of the soldiers was struck in the neck, the shot going lissr through, and killing him instantly. The elear through, and killing him instantly. The other was struck alongside of the eye, the
