THURSDAY MORNING, DEC. 4.

LOCAL INTELLIGENCE

From Yesterday's Evening Gazette.

Wanted to See his Wife for Larceny.—A singular case came before Mayor Alexander yesterday afternoon. A laborer named Gallagher, residing on Allegheny avenue, was brought before the Mayor charged with having in his possession a quantity of goods alleged to have been stolen from the dwelling of Mr. Thomas Bigham, on Penn street. It appeared that during his absence from home on Tuesday last, his wife had pawned a number of articles, and obtained a certificate of deposit for $20, and $18 in cash, with which she cleared herself for a visit of a week. Her husband set out to obtain an explanation of the matter, and found the articles in question in the possession of Mr. Bigham's mother-in-law, who refused to give them up. Mr. Bigham then went to the certificate, and found that his wife had also received the money. Under the impression that she had run off with a paramour, he then went to the police office, and had her arrested for larceny. Mrs. Bigham, it appears, had been in the habit of pawning articles belonging to her husband, and had pawned the articles in question for the purpose of raising money to enable her to visit her children, who were living in the country. She had also purchased a new dress with the money, and had left enough to pay the rent due, the landlord refusing to allow her to remove the goods without the payment of the rent. Gallagher, after hearing the explanation, refused to allow his wife to be punished, and the case was dismissed. Gallagher then left the office with the intention of going home, but was arrested on the charge of assault and battery on the officer who had arrested his wife. He was committed to jail in default of bail.

Philadelphia Cattle Market.

December 1.—The receipts of cattle at the Avenue drove yards this week, reach 1,500 head, and the market has been active throughout the week, with prices ruling higher than last week. The receipts to-day were 1,500 head, including 1,000 Western and 500 Chester county cattle, and sold at 7@8½c for extra, 6@6½c for fair to good, and 5@5½c per pound for ordinary, and 3@5c per hundred for common.

Sheep.—The receipts were 5,000 head, and sold at 4@5c per pound.

Hogs.—The receipts were 2,000 head, and sold at 6@6½c per pound.

Markets by Telegraph.

Reported for the Gazette by

Hawks, Field & Law, of the Mechanics' Bank.

Corrected regularly for the Gazette by

Hawks, Field & Law, of the Mechanics' Bank.

New York Sunday, Dec. 1, 1861.

New York Monday, Dec. 2, 1861.

New York Tuesday, Dec. 3, 1861.

New York Wednesday, Dec. 4, 1861.

The Morning.

We received a copy of the President's Message, on Tuesday last, and at precisely ten o'clock it was placed in the hands of our foreman. At two o'clock and ten minutes the last "take" was in type, and a proof from the first page of that sheet was in our hands. At three o'clock the last page of the paper was completed, and at half past three the last copy of the edition was printed. Thus we obtained the whole copy, we were told, before any other paper in the city, and were enabled to issue a full edition of the Message in time for the public dinners by at least one hour.

In the evening, according to custom, reporters were sent to the Councils, and were employed in taking down the proceedings, when the announcement was made that the Mayor had received a telegraphic despatch announcing the death of Col. Baker. The reporters were then ordered to the residence of the Mayor, and were admitted to an interview. At ten o'clock the Mayor issued a proclamation announcing the sad intelligence, and ordering the flags on the City Hall to be hoisted at half mast, and that the Councils would meet at 11 o'clock on the following morning to adopt resolutions of respect to the memory of the deceased. Our reporters were then ordered to the residence of Col. Baker's family, and were admitted to the room where the body lay. Here they remained until after midnight, and obtained all the particulars relative to the last moments of the deceased. Our reporters then returned to the office, and wrote out their notes, and the proof was ready for the press at half past two o'clock. The whole of the matter was then put in type, and the paper was completed at half past three o'clock. We mention these facts to show the enterprise of the Morning Post, and the facilities it possesses for obtaining the latest news for the morning edition.

The Message.

We publish to-day the President's Message, on Tuesday last, and at precisely ten o'clock it was placed in the hands of our foreman. At two o'clock and ten minutes the last "take" was in type, and a proof from the first page of that sheet was in our hands. At three o'clock the last page of the paper was completed, and at half past three the last copy of the edition was printed. Thus we obtained the whole copy, we were told, before any other paper in the city, and were enabled to issue a full edition of the Message in time for the public dinners by at least one hour.

In the evening, according to custom, reporters were sent to the Councils, and were employed in taking down the proceedings, when the announcement was made that the Mayor had received a telegraphic despatch announcing the death of Col. Baker. The reporters were then ordered to the residence of the Mayor, and were admitted to an interview. At ten o'clock the Mayor issued a proclamation announcing the sad intelligence, and ordering the flags on the City Hall to be hoisted at half mast, and that the Councils would meet at 11 o'clock on the following morning to adopt resolutions of respect to the memory of the deceased. Our reporters were then ordered to the residence of Col. Baker's family, and were admitted to the room where the body lay. Here they remained until after midnight, and obtained all the particulars relative to the last moments of the deceased. Our reporters then returned to the office, and wrote out their notes, and the proof was ready for the press at half past two o'clock. The whole of the matter was then put in type, and the paper was completed at half past three o'clock. We mention these facts to show the enterprise of the Morning Post, and the facilities it possesses for obtaining the latest news for the morning edition.

Not Dead.—W. Allegheny, whose serious illness from the use of tobacco we had occasion to notice recently, is now able to move about a little, and Hopes are now entertained for his ultimate recovery.

OUR ARMY CORRESPONDENCE.

From Col. Hayes's Regiment.

Camp Lyndon—High Ground, Sutton, Braxton County, Va., Nov. 29, 1861.

Friend and Dicky—Sickness of Dr. Pendleton, &c.

Headquarters 23rd Regiment, P. V. }
Hacksburg and Buckhannon Road, }
November 24, 1861. }

We are now a couple of miles from Agda Landing, on the right alongside the Agda Creek, which, as I said in my last, is a tributary of the Kanawha river. We could reach Richmond in good time here. But the "rebs" are still right in our front, prepared, no doubt, for any emergency that may present itself, and ready to dispute our further progress. The grand advance of the army, however, will soon overtake and outflank completely the rebels, and then we will be able to march on to Richmond without any opposition. Our regiment is in the advance, and will be the first to enter the rebel capital. We are in the midst of the enemy's country, and have to be constantly on the alert. Our pickets are thrown out in front, and we have to keep a strong guard in camp. Our regiment is the only one in the division. I think such an arrangement is a good one, as we are always ready for any attack. We are now encamped on the top of a hill, and have a splendid view of the surrounding country. We have a fine camp ground, and have made as excellent quarters as circumstances will allow. We are generally very comfortable. Our tents are pitched in regular order, and we have a good supply of fuel. Our rations are also very good. We have plenty of bread, pork, beef, coffee, sugar, rice, beans, potatoes, &c., and occasionally we get a little fresh beef. Our boys are in excellent health and spirits. We have had no sickness in the regiment since we left Camp Dennison, with the exception of a few cases of measles, which have proved very mild. Dr. Pendleton, our surgeon, is a very attentive officer, and is very much liked by the men. He is also a very pleasant gentleman in his intercourse with the officers. He is a native of Virginia, and has a large family residing in Richmond. He has not seen them since the commencement of the present difficulties, and is very anxious to see them. He has written to them frequently, but has received no answer. He has also written to the Secretary of War, requesting permission to visit his family, but has received no answer. He is very much afraid that they have been driven from their home by the rebels, and that they have gone to Europe, or somewhere else. Some of the officers have received letters from their friends in Richmond, but Dr. Pendleton has not been so fortunate