Mr. Seward on the Proclamation.
Few of our eminent men have altogether escaped misrepresentation; but those who seem to have come in for more than their share of it. Of these Mr. Seward is, for some time past, certainly the most prominent. His influence in the government of all the members of the present Administration, Mr. Seward alone, the able, earnest and energetic Secretary of War, can perhaps claim to have come in for an amount of misrepresentation. History will, in the future, doubtless, list the names of both these distinguished men to those high places of honor reserved for patriots, who, through evil and good reports, have faithfully devoted themselves to the noble work of saving their country.

At no point has Mr. Seward been more misapprehended of late, than on that which forms the subject of the President's Proclamation of the 22d of September. It has been stated that he opposed it to the last, and though he signed it, he is reported to have done so with a heavy heart. It is true that Mr. Seward has been reported to have done so with a heavy heart. It is true that Mr. Seward has been reported to have done so with a heavy heart. It is true that Mr. Seward has been reported to have done so with a heavy heart.

In a dispatch to Mr. Adams, under date of September 25, he says:
As you are well aware, it has never been decided by the President that the insurgents should be treated as rebels. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

No one knows how slavery was springing upon the nation when it was springing upon the nation. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

The interests of humanity have now become identified with the cause of our country, and this has resulted not from any interference of constitutional restrictions by the government, but from the practical necessities of the moment. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

In subsequent dispatch, Mr. Seward says:
Your dispatch of October 10th has been received. It shows that the President's proclamation has produced a great British impression similar in nature, and differing only in degree, from the impression which it has produced in our own country. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

The war upon the President, which has been so long and so bitter, is now drawing to a close. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point. It is true that the President has not yet decided upon this point.

Report of the Secretary of the Treasury

We give on Saturday a pretty comprehensive abstract of this important state paper; but we think we cannot do better than to give in full that portion of the report which treats of the subject of Treasury Notes and currency in general. We repeat for the abstract a careful perusal.

The whole power to borrow money under the act of July, 1861, to authorize national notes, and under which means for meeting the demand for money has been provided, has been exercised by Congress at the last session. There are of two general classes, namely, the notes which provide revenue from duties and taxes, and those which authorize the issue of money by the Treasury.

The law of the second class, and (1st) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (2d) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (3d) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (4th) the act authorizing the issue of national notes.

The law of the second class, and (1st) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (2d) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (3d) the act authorizing the issue of national notes, and (4th) the act authorizing the issue of national notes.
