A Voice in Richmond---Latest News from the United States.

The Rev. R. J. Graves, once a Baptist clergyman of some note in Tennessee, has, according to the Richmond Enquirer, just returned to the South after a visit of six weeks to the free States. Mr. Graves publishes in the Enquirer an account of what he saw. These results are not encouraging to the rebels; nor do they confirm the many prophecies of the Charleston and Richmond journals, as to the distress and poverty which would prostrate the free States shortly. He says:

I shall state the substance of what I learned in New York, during a stay of three weeks, from merchants, bankers and lawyers, in regard to public sentiment throughout the entire North. And this is it: The whole North is prospering, growing rich, in consequence of the war. The commercial and manufacturing interests of the North-eastern States are now more flourishing than ever before. Everything made finds a ready market.

The Northwest finds it more profitable to convert its immense quantities of grain into beef and pork, and forward these to the eastern ports for shipment to Europe, than it was formerly to dispose of them in the markets of the Southwest.

Politically, Mr. Graves assures the Enquirer and its readers, the prospect is as fair for us and as bad for the rebels.

Vermont, Massachusetts and Connecticut are not more hostile to our institutions than Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois. The conduct of parties now waging in the State of New York, and which we unduly magnify and hope may be of benefit to us, really amounts to nothing so far as ending the war is concerned.

Financially, he draws a picture which must fill the rebel leaders' hearts with bitterness and envy.

With gold enough to manage foreign indebtedness, unbounded confidence is given to government money and securities. In no instance are bonds below par; any fluctuation that occurs is always above that figure, and the government currency, the demand note or "greenback" sells readily at from seven to eight per cent. premium in exchange for state bank notes. No nation has yet failed to preserve a war for the want of money, and they will not be the first to set the example.

Mr. Graves is pretty accurately informed, and he does not hesitate to tell what he knows. He continues, of the spirit of the free States:

They have now discovered that the rebellion is a serious thing—one not to be trifled with, but they have not yet exerted their strength to suppress it. They confess that they have been hitherto unprepared to meet it successfully. But the time is coming. Their people are slow to move—much slower than we—but now they are rousing, and when they do take hold, it will be with bull-dog obstinacy. When the time comes to execute the "emancipation proclamation," they will have fifteen new war vessels of the most formidable character completed and on our waters; in addition to their present navy; they will have a million disciplined, well-armed troops in the field, and if the rebellion then holds out—

—then, Mr. Graves assures his readers, scenes of horror will be witnessed.

He goes on to say that the North has but to put forth its power; that it has material for new armies; that the people are united in their determination to put down rebellion; and that they will do and suffer everything to that end. Therefore, he tells the rebels to make up their minds for a long war—a war of many years.

French Mediation---Disappointment of the Rebels.

The Charleston Courier, like its Richmond confreres, is greatly disappointed at the failure of the Napoleonic "idea" of mediation. It says the Emperor's generous proposal will not be forgotten by the people or the government of the South, and it is more than ever convinced that the "Imperial ruler of France is not overrated as a statesman;" but it has no words to express its utter abhorrence of England, which refused to listen to the scheme. After the rejection of the Emperor's proposal, the Courier says that now they have nothing to do but to fight:

Let us resolve afresh to look only to ourselves and the Almighty Disposer of events. We will have to fight our own way to independence, and having attained that, recognition will follow as a matter of course.

—Spite of this heroic declaration, however, it is very clear that the rebels are grievously disappointed and distressed by the failure of the foreign mediation scheme—on the success of which they had built their highest hopes.

JEFF. DAVIS, in the long recital of grievances in his proclamation, says:

And whereas, The President of the United States has, by public and official declarations, signified not only his approval of the effort to excite servile war within the Confederacy, but his intention to give aid and encouragement thereto, if these independent states shall continue to refuse submission to a foreign power after the first day of January next, and has thus made known that all appeal to the law of nations, the dictates of reason, and the instincts of humanity would be addressed in vain to our enemies, and that they can be deterred from the commission of these crimes only by the terrors of just retribution; and

And finally, The African slaves have not only been incited to insurrection by every license and encouragement, but numbers of them have actually been armed for a servile war—a war in its nature far exceeding the horrors and most merciless atrocities of savages:

These allegations, though utterly false, show how terrible to the rebels is the impending blow of emancipation; and Davis evidently has some hope that the President can be deterred from what he calls "the commission of these crimes, by the terrors of just retribution." The monster from which all these calamities sprang has been touched at last in a vital part, and this proclamation is its death cry.

There are indications that some of the oil wells in Canada have "touched bottom." The famous Shaw well, which used to yield from 800 to 1,000 barrels daily, has stopped flowing almost entirely.

It was rumored in Nashville, on Dec. 20, that the rebel General Geo. Crittenden died in Knoxville on the day preceding.

The Lexington (Mo.) Union has commenced the publication of a roll of all persons in that section who have given aid and comfort to the rebels.

The Rebels in England---The "London Confederate States Aid Society"---An Address in Behalf of the South.

Mr. Geo. Thompson, M. P., writes from London to the Boston Liberator:

I have just become aware of the existence of a society in London, calling itself "The London Confederate States Aid Society." It professes to be originated by Englishmen, and has issued an address "To the British Public and all Sympathisers in Europe." I have procured a copy of this document. The night before last the association held a meeting at its office, No. 3 Devonshire street, Portland Place, near the American Embassy. Having a meeting of my own at the same hour, I sent William A. Jackson, who brought me back an account of the proceedings. Mr. Confederate Commissioner Mason, of Fugitive Slave law notoriety, was present. On the retirement of that person from the meeting he was confronted at the door by men exhibiting a placard, three feet long by two feet wide, in which was represented a negro in tattered garments, with an iron collar around his neck. Beneath the figure were the words—"Dudley Wells, of Montgomery county, Missouri, as he appeared when, after two months hiding in the woods, he was rescued by a party of federal soldiers—&c., &c.

And then the following:

"Fellow countrymen! Remember that the 'Southern chivalry,' which asks your sympathy and admiration, is composed of the wretches who perpetrate these atrocities on the weak and defenceless. Will you not, then, with a spirit worthy of the sons of freedom, rather give your moral support to the men who are shedding their blood (as thirty years ago you gave £20,000,000 of money) to purge this nation from the foul shame and guilt of complicity with slavery?"

The Fugitive Slave Law ex-senator, and now rebel commissioner, on beholding this placard, and, as soon as he was able, got beyond sight of the apparition of Dudley Wells!

"Grinned horribly a ghastly smile,"

THE REBEL ADDRESS.

The Address of the Confederate States Aid Association is a virtual appeal for pecuniary contributions, to enable the rebels to "continue their war against their unscrupulous enemies." It begins by charging the North with having "insulted, imprisoned, fogged, violated and outraged the women of the South in the most inhuman and revolting manner." Further, "The North, in executing their fiendish and demoniacal purpose, are bent on mischief, robbery, murder, arson and crimes of the most revolting nature; plotting their hellish rage by inflicting every kind of torture, spreading wild ruin, devastation, destruction and universal desolation, for the purpose of revenge and hatred. In their fury, madness and malice, the atrocities, cruelties, crimes and outrages committed against the South are without a parallel in the history of the world." After much more of the same sort, Englishmen are invoked, in the names of "Civilization, justice, peace, liberty, (!) humanity and Christianity, to come to themselves and to arrest the horrors of the blood-stained march of tyranny, and to rush to the aid of the South with—their purse, shillings and pounds."

This anti-climax is followed by an appeal to the women of our country. Here are the words:

"Fairest and best of Earth! For the sake of violated innocence and the honor of your sex, come in woman's majesty and omnipotence, and give strength to a cause that has for its object the highest aims—the amelioration and exaltation of humanity."

This address is followed by a statement of the case of the North against the South, which is thus put: The non-execution of the Fugitive Slave law was a virtual dissolution of the Union, and involved the South from their allegiance to the national compact. The Republican party is a political conspiracy, and Mr. Lincoln the head of vigilant committeeism, under a higher law than the laws of the land. The South is invaded by hordes of mercenaries, collected from the scum of almost every nation. The South has no rival, either in commerce or in glory. England's neutrality has starved the South while it has replenished the North. The conduct of the South should secure the admiration of all lovers of law and order, and, finally, the South implores England, with tears, to help her own children."

Washington News.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.

THE FRENCH IN MEXICO.

Late official information from Mexico represents the condition of the French Army of Invasion as most critical. Their ranks are being thinned by sickness and want of wholesome food, the agents have been sent to this country for supplies of various kinds, and empowered to make large contracts for future use. These facts having reached the Mexican Minister here, he has entered his solemn protest against such supplies being allowed to go forward. Secretary Seward, however, declines to interfere, and complains is made that he even extends to the French privileges denied to the Mexicans. Whatever cause may exist for this charge, it is unquestionable that much ill-feeling is being engendered in the Mexican Embassy.

ARRESTED AS A HOSTAGE.

John B. Hunter was to-day committed to the Old Capitol Prison as a hostage for Jos. Stiles, a Government scout, who recently fell into the hands of the rebels, and whom they propose to punish as a spy. This Government is determined to protect its soldiers from the outrages at the hands of the Confederates to which they have heretofore quietly submitted.

FIVE THOUSAND GERMANS PROPOSE TO SETTLE IN FLORIDA.

Five thousand Germans have notified Hon. Eli Thayer that they are willing to settle in Florida upon the terms of his plan of restoring that State to the Federal Government. One thousand of these Germans now reside in St. Louis, Mo.

THE PROCLAMATION.

It is well known that President Lincoln has drafted his proclamation of emancipation, and leading Republican Senators of what is called the ultra school, who have held long conversations with him on this important subject, express their confidence that he will give the rebellion its coup-de-grace on New Year's day. Letters from John Bright and other foreign politicians have been read to him, declaring that a proclamation of emancipation will at once array Great Britain with the Union.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 27.—Jeff. Davis's retaliatory proclamation, denouncing the penalty of death upon Gen. Butler and his officers, is regarded here as a threat to prevent the issue of the President's proclamation of emancipation on the first of January.

The President, nevertheless, will issue that proclamation, and will probably make allusion in it to this violent manifesto from Davis.

The rebels' fear of the Emancipation Proclamation is regarded as the chief reason for Davis' excessive rampage. He shows that he is alarmed, and it is clear that the President's policy of emancipation already begins to tell. The rebels are badly frightened, but they will have to wait some time before they hang Butler.

Rebel Saltpetre Works Destroyed.

On Dec. 14, Capt. Birch, with about one hundred men, succeeded in destroying the rebel saltpetre works at Yellville, Ark. He took Capt. P. S. McNamara and twenty-three men prisoners, destroying about thirty stand of arms, five hundred pounds of dried beef, and a complete supply of provisions for the winter for a full company
