ician of the State of New York, and a much wider range. He is a mere polititaken to carp and find fault with those who out principles which he once advocated. Probably private griefs and personal jealousies have thrown him off the track. In order to show Mr. WEED's position from his article: "When rebellion was remnant in the ex-"When rebellion was rampant in the ex-treme Southern States, a question a rose whe-ther North Carolina and Tennessee should remain in the Union or go out of it. We all remember the "Border State Proposition," upon the adoption of which, by Congress, rebellion, from the Mississippi to the At-lantic, would have been bounded by the Southern lines of Tennessee and North Carolina. With almodification, which the Border State representatives of Green to a co-Carolina. With simodification, which the Border State representatives offseed to accept, we advocated that "compromise." And for this, also, we were severely deduced. In the Peace Congress, where the Legislature honored us with a seat, the Legislature honored us with a seat, which we resigned in favor of a distinguished citizen, the "Border State Proposition" was again rejected, and consequently two States, a majority of whose citizens yearned to remain in the Union, were lost"

This shows that Mr. WEED favored "con-"compromise," further lowering of the bright banner of Freedom to the very moment when treason had blotted rearing its defenses around all the southern comt. He was for enthroning Slavery above every other interest, material and moral, and yielding every great principle asserted by a majority of the American people in the election of 1860. That being

The following resolution, with the carried out without a political revolution. The elavery question, so far as the existence of that institution in the States were concerned, was not properly a political question. It was a moral question, however, and open to free discussion by all who chose to speak or write on the subject; and the great body of the American people observed and acted upon this distinction. Hence it was that the Abolitionists never much progress as a political party. The Republicans, observing this obvious distinction, confined their opposition to slavery to its further extension over free territory, and it was upon that issue that Mr. Lin-COLN was elected. This was perfectly constitutional, while at the same time it was an indirect expression of their opposition to slavery as an evil, a crime and a curse. slavery in the States required a political tion, and this revolution was brought about by the slaveholders themselves. With their own hands they tore the segis of the Constitution from their darling institution, and madly exposed it to the stroke of the National sword in the hands of the Commandation of of the Commander-in-Chief of the nation; and most faithless would be have been to Hatchie and Coldwater rivers, will be reand most faithless would be have been to his duty and to his cath of office had he refused to strike the blow; for he knows, and Mr. Ween knows, that slavery is at once the strength and the weakness of the South; its most vital and most vulnerable serve. No. Mr. Ween, in striking this blow, which is so troubling the rebels and blow, which is so troubling the rebels and their sympathetic friends, Mr. Liscous followed the lead of sober reason and sound common sense; and if Mesers, Garrison, and Prilling, and Grarer Surris can approve the act, so much the better; and if such democrats as Banceour, and Butter, "Citisens will not be considered responsible for attacks made by regularly organ-

If they come at us with light draft boats, which are able to go any are faithfully and legitimately carrying where in the bay, you can see what an advantage they have over us."

The officer's letter, to which we have alluded above, tells how the rebels did com at them with just such light boats; and from the beginning, we quote the following how, sheltered by cotton bales, with about one hundred men on each boat, no less than five came at our vessels, and first, with assistance from the shore, carried the Harriet Lane by boarding-"eleven mer only of her crew escaping death."

The Westfield, as we have heard, was blown up by order of Captain Renshaw who, after he had sent off nearly all his rew to one of the other boats, was, with his Chief Engineer and Executive Office and thirteen men, involved in the same destruction as the ship he had so heroicall determined to destroy, sconer than suffer her to fall into the hands of traitors.

The other vessels, with the exception of two ceal boats, escaped. The estimate of our loss is stated by the writer at not over 125, while that of the rebels could not hav been less than 500. The foregoing does not, of course, in-

Such are the unsatisfactory particulars his position then, we need not feel surprised we glean from the latest accounts received, that he is now banded with JEFF.
