J. H. O'NEIL, Manufacturer of WIRE WORK, he always on hand and makes to order SCREEN WIRE CLOTH, FLOUR SIEVES; COPPER, BRASS AND IRON WIRE CLOTH; BIRD CAGES; plain and ornamental WIRE WORK, for gardens, flower stands, &c.; Arch ways for flowers, Wire Lattice and Trellis Work for arbors, &c.; NURSERY FENDERS; HAT AND BONNET FRAMES; MEAT AND CHEESE SAFES; WIRE WINDOW SHADES, in cheap or better kind of cloth; I shall go back to the determination never to give up, never to compromise renewed applause, never to have anything but that flag of ours as the symbol of our nationality. Whoever differs from that, let him go south of Mason and Dixon's line—he has no business here. [Applause.]
We may have no means of dealing with him here, but there are plenty at the South who will receive him with open arms, for the reason that he is their friend, not the friend of the country. Who proposes to give up the tomb of Washington? Who Yorktown? Who the honors won by Jackson at New Orleans? Who proposes to have anything less than that which belongs to us? Who proposes to give up our fair claim to Mexico, if it comes to that? No one proposes to give up the rights of this Union.
But let me repeat—because I hear there are some who falter—some what may, whether weal or woe, there is one thing which we will not lose, and that is, the supremacy of this Government over every inch of our boundary.
I desire a single word on the question of Emancipation. On that question, you know, I have held certain opinions. Those opinions have received, in some degree, correction. I have views to offer which I think will commend themselves to the judgment of every one of you.
Is there a man here who doubts that some time or other, in the providence of God, the negro is to be free—and that some day the protection of the laws will be extended over him, and that he will become free? No man doubts that, and all desire to guard against the evils that may arise from that change, and which cannot be made without disorganizing our political system. It is my opinion that all this has been sent upon the nation for some great object; and it is in my opinion that it will be easier at this time to settle this question than to leave it to be settled hereafter.
Is it not evident to every mind, that the day and hour have come when all men, so far as this country is concerned—and it is the last refuge of Slavery on the globe—shall be in political rights free and equal, as they were declared by the Declaration of Independence? [Applause.] Let no man be concerned about the question of social equality. They will be just so far equal as God has made them equal, and no more and no less. Take care lest we be found fighting against God. If He has not made them our equals, they will not be our equals. But He has made them free. God willed them free. God will have them free. And yet His will be done!
As Gen. Butler took his seat, three times three cheers were given with spontaneous and irrepressible enthusiasm. Presently the General stepped to the floor in front of the platform, when thousands crowded forward to take him by the hand, the band meanwhile playing patriotic airs. This pleasant ceremony concluded, the General left the hall and the great assembly separated.

On Thursday, the Legislature of Massachusetts re-elected the Hon. CHARLES SUMNER to the United States Senate, by a vote of 227 to 43 for Josiah G. Abbott, 2 for C. F. Adams, and 2 for Caleb Cushing.
On receiving the intelligence in Washington, a large number of Mr. Sumner's friends proposed a serenade, but he declined the compliment and requested that the money which would have been spent for music, should be given to the Hospital Fund. Nine cheers were given for Mr. Sumner.

Movement of the Potomac Army.

The N. Y. World, of Friday morning, being under no restraints as regards its principles, which would prevent it from the publication of military movements, states that there is every indication that the Army of the Potomac is again in motion. After referring to the large secessions which have been made to Gen. Foster's army in North Carolina, and the prevailing opinion that a simultaneous movement in that quarter was about to be made on Goldsboro, Wilmington, and Charleston, it goes on to say that this present movement on the Rappahannock may be a diversion to prevent the Confederate armies from reinforcing the army of Gen. Bragg.
"The eloquence of bare quotations transcends the abilities of any editor, however gifted, and throws him at once into that vast herd whose empty stomachs are an ample excuse for their gaping astonishment at the unprecedented altitude in the charges for the commonest necessities of life. And if it were possible for the half-nourished body to withstand the encroachment of disease, it would be a violation of the instincts of the citizen of Richmond to know that he dwells in a perfect storehouse of maladies, and may take his pick at any hour of the day or night, of the deadliest calamities that afflict the human frame.
"To be the prey of the most lingering and loathsome contagions is surely not altogether desirable, but churlish indeed, must be the sufferer who, in the midst of the acutest agonies, cannot find abundant solace in the reflection that he can pay his incompetent doctor in shinplasters; and that when he dies, as he certainly will, he will be buried in the suburbs of Richmond among a countless throng of one legged soldiers, courtesans, garroters and blockade."

On the last day of the last year Jeff. Davis made a speech in Mobile, in which he urged his auditors not to find fault with the soldiers and their Generals. He said—"Even if they do wrong, sustain them; better that our independence be achieved, no matter by what measures, than to submit to the domination of the Yankees, who are seeking to enchain us in the same degrading servitude with themselves, with a baboon for a king."

The Richmond Examiner says that John Miner Botts has recently purchased an estate in Orange county, Virginia, of 2,500 acres, for $104,600, and has left the city to take possession of it, with the intention of devoting the remainder of his years to agricultural pursuits.

The Lights and Shadows of Life in Richmond.

The Richmond Whig says that the Marquis of Hartington, a son of the Duke of Devonshire, is in that city. He relates that while in Washington he was introduced to the President, who, on hearing his name, exclaimed, "Why, Hartington rhymes with Partington!"
The Examiner has a sarcastic article on the peculiarities of life in Richmond. After ironically saying that there is no place of residence in the habitable world so delightful as the capital of the Southern Confederacy, "eulogizing" the purity of morals, profound learning and exalted statesmanship of the members of the Administration, it continues: "Here is the sweet Baltimore plug, adorning the principal thoroughfares; the new man, the gatroter, is here. In the palatial stores on Main street, once inhabited by Yankees devoted to the Union, we find brawny Italians vending apples at half a dollar apiece, and nondescript Southerners selling minute plugs of wretched tobacco at twenty-five cents. Stout Marylanders occupy rooms on the cross streets and there throw away blockade boots and shoes with reckless liberality. Substitute agents, follow their unremunerative vocation in nameless places; extortioners roll in the wealth accumulated from everything that the earth produces or the hand of man can fashion.
The verminous deserter parades his rags in ostentatious defiance alike of civil and of military authority. The spirit of freedom is bravely manifest in the people. It is beautifully exemplified in the Italian fruiterer, who with difficulty refrains from kicking you out of doors if you refuse to pay him a dollar an ounce for his peanuts. The small tailor, suddenly become rich, is speechless with indignation if you dare ask him to unbend his dignity in the contemptible operation of mending your clothes. The entire absence of obsequiousness on the part of our modern shopkeepers is one of the most encouraging features of the new times in this Confederation."
"An exceedingly low estimate of the fascinations of the life in Richmond would be formed if the account should not include the nominal price of provisions, the astounding healthfulness of the air, and the abundance of the precious metals.
"The eloquence of bare quotations transcends the abilities of any editor, however gifted, and throws him at once into that vast herd whose empty stomachs are an ample excuse for their gaping astonishment at the unprecedented altitude in the charges for the commonest necessities of life. And if it were possible for the half-nourished body to withstand the encroachment of disease, it would be a violation of the instincts of the citizen of Richmond to know that he dwells in a perfect storehouse of maladies, and may take his pick at any hour of the day or night, of the deadliest calamities that afflict the human frame.

Gen. Butler at Lowell--His Speech.

GEN. BUTLER met, with a cordial reception on arriving at his home in Lowell. The meeting was presided over by Mayor Horsford. The welcoming address was made by the Hon. John A. Goodwin. GEN. BUTLER responded at considerable length, eloquently alluding to the services and heroism of the Massachusetts soldiers who had accompanied him, and stating with great clearness, and convincing force of argument, the case of the Nation against the conspiracy of Slaveholders who have attempted to dismember it. He reviewed the principal questions involved in his administration of the Department entrusted to him by the Government, and showed that the sum of the whole matter is, that "the rebellion is a rebellion against the working classes"—property conspiring to make labor its slave. He closed with the following eloquent and patriotic remarks:

Now, my friends, I have detained you upon these topics quite too long. I have only come here to meet you, and hear from you those kind manifestations which you have been pleased to bestow upon me, and to return to you the heartiest gratitude which I feel. I assure you that to your efforts, to the efforts of Massachusetts, and to the ideas of Massachusetts and New Eng and, the country is indebted for that measure of liberty which has been secured, and for those great efforts which are now being put forth. Be not deceived. Be not weary!
Remember this: that while we may feel this war is hard for us, it is the effort of desperation for them. I have seen the conscript laws of the South taking the boy of sixteen and the old man of sixty—the schoolmaster not excepted—and force them into the ranks. While it costs us effort, it costs them desperation. While it costs us labor, it costs them life-blood. I wish that they might be won back without this; but so they have not chosen. As long as life lasts, as long as any power remains, we must stand by the Union, one and indivisible. [Applause.]
Every traitor, every man, every stream, every lake, every river, every mountain, that ever belonged to the flag of the United States must still remain under the flag of the United States, cost what it will, cost what it may. [Enthusiastic applause.] If, as you flatteringly observed, I shall go back to another field of duty, I shall go back with the determination never to give up, never to compromise renewed applause, never to have anything but that flag of ours as the symbol of our nationality. Whoever differs from that, let him go south of Mason and Dixon's line—he has no business here. [Applause.]
We may have no means of dealing with him here, but there are plenty at the South who will receive him with open arms, for the reason that he is their friend, not the friend of the country. Who proposes to give up the tomb of Washington? Who Yorktown? Who the honors won by Jackson at New Orleans? Who proposes to have anything less than that which belongs to us? Who proposes to give up our fair claim to Mexico, if it comes to that? No one proposes to give up the rights of this Union.
But let me repeat—because I hear there are some who falter—some what may, whether weal or woe, there is one thing which we will not lose, and that is, the supremacy of this Government over every inch of our boundary.

I desire a single word on the question of Emancipation. On that question, you know, I have held certain opinions. Those opinions have received, in some degree, correction. I have views to offer which I think will commend themselves to the judgment of every one of you.
Is there a man here who doubts that some time or other, in the providence of God, the negro is to be free—and that some day the protection of the laws will be extended over him, and that he will become free? No man doubts that, and all desire to guard against the evils that may arise from that change, and which cannot be made without disorganizing our political system. It is my opinion that all this has been sent upon the nation for some great object; and it is in my opinion that it will be easier at this time to settle this question than to leave it to be settled hereafter.
Is it not evident to every mind, that the day and hour have come when all men, so far as this country is concerned—and it is the last refuge of Slavery on the globe—shall be in political rights free and equal, as they were declared by the Declaration of Independence? [Applause.] Let no man be concerned about the question of social equality. They will be just so far equal as God has made them equal, and no more and no less. Take care lest we be found fighting against God. If He has not made them our equals, they will not be our equals. But He has made them free. God willed them free. God will have them free. And yet His will be done!
As Gen. Butler took his seat, three times three cheers were given with spontaneous and irrepressible enthusiasm. Presently the General stepped to the floor in front of the platform, when thousands crowded forward to take him by the hand, the band meanwhile playing patriotic airs. This pleasant ceremony concluded, the General left the hall and the great assembly separated.

On Thursday, the Legislature of Massachusetts re-elected the Hon. CHARLES SUMNER to the United States Senate, by a vote of 227 to 43 for Josiah G. Abbott, 2 for C. F. Adams, and 2 for Caleb Cushing.
On receiving the intelligence in Washington, a large number of Mr. Sumner's friends proposed a serenade, but he declined the compliment and requested that the money which would have been spent for music, should be given to the Hospital Fund. Nine cheers were given for Mr. Sumner.
