chance to consider the report. He had never seen it yet.

Mr. Sherif made a vigorous apsech against the whole business. He had never been able to find a single person who had petitioned for the opening of these streets, and the entire proceeding was unjust and unca led for.

Mr. Huchlison took the same ground. No one had even asked for the opening of the streets, and no benefit would result to him from it. Where did Councils, then, get the light to tax his property for that purpose?

Mr. Hopkins spoke at considerable length in regard to the action of Councils in the premises, and was replied to by Mr. McDon-aid, who pronogneed the matter little less than an outrage and mi importion.

Further remarks were made by Messes. Dill, Tate, McIntyre, Hepkins and others.

When Mr. Dill was on the floor, he asked:

"Is there a man present in favor of the opening of the streets." All answered "no," with a single-knoption. In regard to the solion of Councils in the premises, and was replied to by Mr. MoDonald, who pronogined the matter little less than an oursage and an imposition.

Firsther remarks were made by Messes. Dill, Tate, Meintyre, Hepkins and others.

When Mr. Dill was on the floor, he asked:
"Is there a man present in favor of the opening of the streets." All answered "no," with a single-exception.

Mr. Dill stated that he would vote just as his contituents instructed him; while Mr. Hopkins stated that he had always been in fayte of opening the streets, and would vote for it through thick and thin.

Mr. Sheriff—Against the instructions of your constituents?

Mr. Hopkins—Yes, sir. Sooner than vote otherwise, I would resign, while Mr. Sheriff remarked that they would attend to him hereafter.
