We can but direct attention to the mass of telegraphic news received since our last issue, without attempting any analysis of it. Of course what will be regarded as the most important portion of these dispatches, relates to the attack on Charleston; but beyond the fact that the Ironsides was not disabled by the rebel batteries, as their reports stated, but was prevented from taking part in the bombardment by becoming unmanageable, owing to the strong current caused by the tide and the narrowness of the channel, we have little reported in addition to what we learned from the dispatches in the Richmond papers.

The movement of the forces under Gen. OSTERHAUS to a point some twenty-five miles below Vicksburg, may indicate that important operations, according to a new programme, are to be undertaken against that rebel key of the Mississippi.

The Confederate Loan in New York.

Samuel Hallett & Co., Bankers, of New York, devote one entire page of their "circular" to an advertisement for the Rebel Cotton Loan for fifteen millions of dollars at ninety per cent. While great prominence is given to the advertisement, a remark is printed on the first page, in very small type, saying something about "the curiosity of our correspondents," and "reserving our comments upon them for more space." These facts we learn from an article in the Evening Post of that city. The whole affair has a treasonable appearance, and is a case that demands the sternest investigation at the hands of the government officials. If this may be done with impunity, the next step will be the opening of recruiting offices in the loyal States for the Confederate armies.

Among the letters from distinguished persons received by the Committee of the Great Union meeting held in New York on Saturday, we find a characteristic one from the accomplished and versatile Oliver Wendell Holmes, from which we extract the following eloquent sentence:

"The shouts in Union Square will be heard on Boston Common; the old grasshopper on Faneuil Hall will wheel round to the southwest to listen for them; our narrow streets will not have room enough for their echoes; Massachusetts will ring with them; Rhode Island, the Lilliputian bride of Liberty, resplendent in the white robe and the proud jewels of their fresh vapourish, will stand on tiptoe to catch the sound; New England will thrill through and through with it, the wide North will be all alive with it; and the west wind will carry it over the prairies, over the sierras, to the far shore fringed with the gold of sunset."

The Mozart Regiment on Fernando Wood.

The officers of the Mozart Regiment of New York city, now attached to Birney's Division in Virginia, have adopted resolutions denouncing the disloyalty of Fernando Wood, who has "on many occasions boasted of his paternity to the regiment." One of the resolutions says:

We indignantly repudiate any claim of Fernando Wood's to our sympathy, our obligations or our respect. We declare that he never furnished a man or a dollar for our benefit whatever; that the stand of colors presented to us at Yonkers, before our departure for the seat of war, in July, 1861, and which Fernando Wood assumed the credit of presenting from his own means, were paid for by the citizens of New York, and never cost Fernando Wood one cent; that we have no sympathy with his principles, no respect for his character, and hope the day is not far distant when such traitors will be shunned as lepers and outcasts."

Recent European advices having made some reference to disturbances in Lancashire, England, we find by the newspapers received by the last steamer, that the harshness and inhumanity of the agents employed to disburse the Relief fund, have produced the bitter and dissatisfied state of feeling among the operatives, which has led to those disturbances. According to the London Spectator, the action of the English Committeemen has been unbearably harsh, and here is the indictment against them:

They accuse the people of ingratitude, idleness and deception, lock the doors of the adult schools, stamp old clothes with "the word 'clean,'" talk brutally to applicants, and act entirely in the interest of the mill-owners. As to the guardians, they actually "insult" applicants, alleging the necessity of speed. The mill-owners either do not remit rent, or where they do, are registering arrears for future repayments, and giving wages so low that the Committees are compelled to supplement them.

The Condition of Society in Rebeldom as described by Mrs. Henry S. Foote.

The Murfreesboro correspondent of the Cincinnati Commercial forwards an intercepted letter, written by Mrs. H. S. Foote, wife of the ex-Congressman from Mississippi, in which she depicts a very wretched state of affairs as existing in Richmond. The letter is dated February 6th. She has a baby called Malvern, in honor of the braves who won laurels on the battle ground of that name; this baby is quite precocious; he spits on the Yankees in their pictures, and has a particular hatred of Old Abe's picture, at which he makes wry faces. Mrs. F. resides at an extensive boarding house in Richmond, the bill of fare in which she sets forth as "high prices and starvation within; such living was never known before on earth."

She is fortunate enough, however, to have a belled bacon ham, which cost $31, three pounds of Rio coffee, which she got for $4 per pound, &c., which, as there is not much to eat on the public table, she cooks in her own room. She makes some very ungrateful criticism upon the ladies of Richmond; accuses Mrs. Davis of being very careless, as she lets her children run round nearly all day without having their faces washed. Everybody, including "Mr. Harris, the minister," are making fortunes out of the war. The said Mr. H. has married Miss Emily Johnson, of Jackson, Miss., who is worth a million in her own right; he has quit preaching, and is very clever and hospitable in his house. The "President" looks careworn and troubled. He is very thin, and looks pale and hasty. He prays aloud in church, and is a devout Episcopalian.

Admiral Farragut.

The insurgents are congratulating themselves that Admiral Farragut has placed himself in a position whence he cannot escape, and where they will soon be enabled to inflict upon him a blow which will severely punish his temerity. They evidently allude to the fact that they have a fleet of rams up the Red river, with which they hope to descend, and by superiority of numbers, overcome the Admiral.

The latest advices represent that Admiral Farragut had passed down the river to Port Hudson, with the Hartford, Albatross and Switzerland. This movement has been apparently made in order to cover the ascent of more vessels of the fleet below Port Hudson, and we may hear soon that another grand passage of the batteries has been effected. When reinforced by vessels of sufficiently light draught, the Admiral can ascend the Red river and finish the career of the Rebel rams and improvised gunboats. We have reason to believe that this is his intention, because it is all important that there should be a Federal fleet between Port Hudson and Vicksburg in order to prevent, as much as possible, the conveyance of supplies across the river. We do not believe that the Admiral intend to run the batteries at Port Hudson and rejoin his fleet below, as that would be a virtual abandonment of the principal object of his mission. The fleet below are inactive, and a necessity exists that some of them should be immediately employed.—N. Y. Commercial.

A correspondent of the Mobile Advertiser and Register says that the wives of Ex-President Tyler, sold at auction a few days ago, brought prodigious prices. Rhenish wines sold for $10 per bottle, old Santerne, Vin Duquesne, $11; Regalia Maderia, $12; Ceylon Maderia, $15.50; Maderia Exploring Expedition, $16.75; Sherry, $15; Old Port, $18.75; French Brandy, very old, $95 to $100 per gallon.

[FROM OUR EVENING EDITION.]

VERY LATEST FROM CHARLESTON.

Particulars of the Recent Attack, from Eye-Witnesses.

Interesting Correspondence between Gen. Hunter and Adm'l Dupont.

BALTIMORE, April 13.—The gunboat Flambeau arrived at Old Point on Saturday afternoon, bringing the officers of the iron-clad Keokuk, which was disabled in the engagement off Charleston, and sunk the next day.

From participants in the engagement, we gather the following particulars:

The fleet, after leaving Hilton Head, rendezvoused in the mouth of the Edisto, and several days were occupied in gathering in the vessels, making final arrangements, issuing orders, and arranging for the attack. All being completed, the fleet left in detachments and assembled off Charleston on Sunday, the 5th inst.

The iron-clad fleet crossed the bar and entered Charleston harbor on Monday. The Keokuk drawing less water than any of the others, was sent in first to find the channel and replace the buoys. Proceeding up the main channel she found an easy and unobstructed entrance, with full eighteen feet water in the shallowest places, more than has ever before been found in that bar. The buoys were replaced without difficulty, the rebels offering no opposition.

The Keokuk returned to the fleet, and on the morning of the 7th an order was given to the iron-clads to enter the harbor. The order was to proceed in single file. The Weehawken was the leading vessel, having in front of her a scow and then between her and the scow Ericsson's torpedo exploder or devil, as it had been called. The Ironsides, with Admiral Dupont on board, was fifth in line, and the Keokuk last. In this order the bar was passed in safety, without detention. The Ironsides stopped off Fort Moultrie, and let go her anchor, it being dangerous to take her further, on account of her drawing over fifteen feet of water.

At this moment, there was a temporary misunderstanding, and all the iron-clads, except the Weehawken and Keokuk, gathered about the Ironside, apparently thinking that they needed assistance. They were, however, soon signalled to go into action. The Keokuk had kept on until she led the line, and had advanced to within 400 yards of Sumter, against whose granite walls she hurled her heavy shot with all the rapidity that the energy of her brave crew could furnish. The rebels, as expected, immediately concentrated fire on the Keokuk, which assumed to lead in the attack. From Sumter and Moultrie, the batteries at Beauregard and Cummings' Point, and from a fort erected on the middle ground, the fire of 400 or 500 guns were concentrated in terrible hail upon the devoted vessel.

Such a fire had perhaps never in the history of the world been equalled. It was met by the efforts of the Keokuk with heroic fortitude, while the balls were striking her at the rate of one for every second. Her guns were worked with vigor and precision, and their weight and force were making their mark upon the walls.

It soon, however, became apparent that the Keokuk had none of the impregnability of Ericsson's Monitors, and that, in fact, as an iron-clad, she was a failure. The rebel balls seemed to penetrate her as easily as those of a wooden vessel. The port holes, or shutters of this ports, became jammed, and her guns practically unserviceable.

During the thirty minutes she remained, one hundred shot struck her. Her flag was shot in to tatters, and the whole side battered, bruised and pierced. Perceiving the severe injuries she had received, the Admiral signalled her to retire out of action, and anchor beyond range. This was safely accomplished. Meantime the monitors Nahant and Catskill moved up to support the Keokuk, and engaged the rebel Sumter. The Ironsides and other vessels at longer range, dividing attention between Moultrie and Sumter. Into and on the latter fort a heavy fire was thus poured, and, it is believed, not without effect. The engagement lasted from one till four o'clock, when Admiral Dupont signalled, and the fleet retired slowly, receiving and returning the rebel fire, until they anchored out of range within the bar.

The Weehawken was assigned to important duty, which was faithfully performed in the midst of the fight, to examine and if possible to fire the obstructions which the rebels extended across the harbor from Sumter to Moultrie. Preceded by a scow and the "devil" in front of her she pushed up straight towards the obstructions. They were found to consist of a net-work of chains and cables stretched across the harbor, over which it was impossible for the Weehawken to run without fouling her propeller, and which it was found impossible to force. The rebels are supposed to have attached to this net-work torpedoes and other submarine explosives. Having completed her examination and tested the impossibility of working up the harbor until some means are devised for the removal of these obstructions, the Weehawken returned and reported to Admiral Dupont, who ordered the discontinuance of the conflict.

It is believed that the damage to Fort Sumter by our fire was serious; so far as it showed externally, it consisted of two embrasures being knocked into one, and numerous indentations in the wall, which, it is believed, a few hours more would have converted into a serious breach. What damage and loss of life was sustained in the interior of the fort is not, of course, known, but it was supposed to have been considerable.

Fort Moultrie also was well hammered, and at least one gun dismounted.

Beyond the sinking of the Keokuk the damage to the Ironsides was very slight, not more than would require twenty-four hours to repair.

The Ironsides was hit frequently, but except having one port shutter injured, was unharmed.

Our informant heard no serious casualties except that of the Keokuk. This vessel sunk next morning about 1,000 yards from Morris Island beach. She had twelve wounded, two of whom, including Acting Ensign McIntosh, will probably die.

The "Devil" was not lost, as stated by rebel dispatches. When the Weehawken returned from a reconnoissance of obstructions, the scow she had in tow broke loose, and grounded on Morris Island. The rebels thinking it a dangerous affair, peppered away at it, thinking it was the "Devil," or something worse; but our informant assured us that the "Devil" was safe, and will yet be made use of against the rebels.

The affair summed up thus: We have entered the harbor made a successful reconnoissance, engaged the rebel forts for three hours, damaged Sumter seriously, lost one vessel, and have an increased and convincing proof of the invulnerability of the Monitor fleet.

The above is made up from an interesting account furnished to the Baltimore American by an eye witness, who was in the fight.

NEW YORK, April 13.—The Times has issued an extra containing the particulars of the attack on Charleston, furnished by the special correspondent of that paper, who arrived in this city this morning. He says the trial was decisive. The ordeal of the two hours served to prove that the defensive powers of the iron fleet are sufficient to withstand the terrible force of the engineery of the works it had to assail, while the limitations of the offensive powers of iron-clads took away all advantage. The result of the recon
