Pittsburgh Gazette.

FRIDAY MORNING, APRIL 17.

Speech of Gen. W. A. Stokes.

This gentleman, who is justly regarded as one of the big guns of his party in Western Pennsylvania, addressed the Democratic club in this city on Tuesday evening last. The speech is published at length in the Post of yesterday, evidently prepared with great care by the author.

Mr. STOKES is a man of very considerable ability; but it is a sad thing to see such talents employed to conceal, under a very thin guise of patriotic generalities, the worst form of that thing we call copperheadism. The whole scope and object of his argument is to bind the arms of the Government with the Constitution, so as to render it utterly powerless to strike either at open or covert treason; to throw the protection of the Constitution around traitors, while the Government itself is left—not only exposed to the open warfare and secret machinations of men whom no law, either human or divine, restrains in their diabolical efforts to destroy the life of the nation—but fettered and powerless. And all this is done under the hypocritical pretense of devotion to the Constitution. "O Liberty!" said a lady who was brought to the scaffold under the rule of Robespierre, "O Liberty! what crimes are committed in thy name!" We may now vary the apostrophe a little, and exclaim, "O Constitution! what crimes are committed in thy name!" First, degraded to be the manacle of slaves; and now, in this hour of calamity, made a fetter wherewith to bind and render powerless the Government itself.

Mr. STOKES assumes that the President has transcended the limits of his constitutional power; but he does not pretend to prove it. We shall only say in return, with all the emphasis the words will bear: it is not true—in no single act or measure has he or Congress done so. In all they have done they have only called forth the true, inherent, but hitherto latent powers of the Constitution.

Let us quote a few sentences:

So soon as the Administration had succeeded by these false pretexts, in seducing into the ranks of the army several hundred thousand Democrats, and felt themselves strong enough to defy the scorn of all power, they commenced a systematic course of perjury and treason by repeated and avowed violations of the Constitution, and of their oaths to support, uphold and defend it. In this horrid exigency the duty of the Democracy was plain, and was performed. The liberty of the citizen is the life of the State. They set themselves to vindicate the violated Constitution. They accepted the gage of battle thrown down by its enemies, the Federal Administration.

So, then, the enemies of the democracy were not the enemies in rebellion and arms against the government, but the government itself—the man constitutionally chosen by the American people to support and defend their constitution, their country, and their fire-sides. The commander-in-chief of the armies of the Union is their only recognized enemy! And yet the author of this sedition is whining about the invasion of his constitutional rights! His rights, or deserts, under the constitution might be to him pretty serious matters were they given to him.

Speaking of the war, he says:

Neither side is responsible for the extremes of malice and madness into which unreasoning fanatics on both sides often went, except so far as they may have adopted the cruel counsels of those infatuated and furious wretches, of whom true antagonistic types are to be found in Sumner and Yancey.

Here are two representative men—one intensely loyal to his country, the other a perjured, blood-stained traitor; yet both are put into one category, and denounced as "infatuated and furious wretches." Could folly, falsehood or impudence go further?

We shall close by letting Mr. STOKES tell the world what he conceives to be the mission of the "democratic party."

The high and sacred mission of the Democratic party, united with the true men of all parties, is to wage peace with the South—to restore the ascendancy of the Constitution, everywhere—to assure the equality of the States, and to vindicate the rights of men.

This shameful paragraph requires no comment. "Make peace with the South" by a shameful surrender to armed traitors; and "vindicate the rights of man" by tightening the bonds of the slave!

The Confederate Loan in Nova Scotia

A banking firm in Halifax, N. S., offered the Confederate loan in the following announcement:

"Stock! stock! stock! by J. D. Nash & Co., at their rooms, Hollis street, on Friday next, 10th instant, at 12 o'clock: 50 shares Union Bank Stock, 6 do. Bank B. N. America, 11 do N. S. Marine Insurance Company, $50,000 Southern Confederate 8 per cent. Debentures, with coupons payable in gold. S. & W. M. GRAY, 139 Hollis street."

When it was put up there was "quite a crowd, but not a single bid was offered—unless we count it one that a 'canny' Scotchman offered to purchase the whole bundle of coupons at the rate of four cents per pound weight for packing paper.

Curious Report about Admiral Wilkes

By the arrival of the British steamship Melita, at New York on Wednesday, we learn that it was currently reported in Havana that Admiral Wilkes is a paroled prisoner, until he can explain the affair of the Vanderbilt firing into a Spanish coasting steamer a short time ago. The report comes from no responsible authority. The Vanderbilt and Sonoma were in Havana.

MR. FULTON, of the Baltimore American, in a letter written three days after the fight at Charleston, says: "It is now understood that the entire iron-clad fleet are to be sent down to join Farragut's squadron, and participate in operations on the Mississippi."

MICHAEL H. SULLIVAN, of Champaign county, Ill., owns probably the largest farm in the Northwest. Ten years since, the farm he now possesses was a dreary waste and its vicinity a solitude. He entered, in 1858, more than 20,000 acres, expended $100,000 in permanent improvements, and now farms rising 9,000 acres. The remainder is under fence, and will, in time, be farmed.

RELEASE OF JOHN MINOR BOTTS.—John Minor Botts, of Virginia, so long incarcerated in Libby prison and in Salisbury, N. C., has been released through the interposition of a friend, an extensive purchaser of tobacco, and has permission to remain on his estate, near Gordonsville, on the pledge of not aiding or abetting the Union cause.

The Late Assault on Charleston--Further Particulars--Disappointment of the Soldiers.

Mr. C. C. Fulton, of the Baltimore American, who is more than ordinarily trustworthy, gives some interesting particulars of the late operations against Charleston, and the feeling among the officers and crews of the iron-clads after the withdrawal from the attack. He says:

"On the morning of the 8th, after the fight, the seven Monitors were all examined, and found them all in as good condition for service as they were upon going into action on the 7th. Half-past one o'clock was the hour fixed upon for a renewal of the bombardment, and the officers of the different vessels were all in readiness and most of them anxious for a renewal of the conflict. The order for the movement was momentarily waited for, but the order never came.

"At three o'clock it was ascertained throughout the fleet that the Admiral had decided that Charleston is impregnable, that Sumter cannot be taken with the vessels and appliances placed at his disposal by the government'—in other words, that the power of the government is not sufficient to humble this nest of rebels.

"In conversation with some of the commanders of the iron-clads, before this order was received, I was assured that the walls of Fort Sumter were pierced and crushed, and the opinion was expressed that in three hours more the fort would be compelled to surrender. Several of them testified that their immense shot had entered the embrasures of the fort and dismounted the guns, and that the walls were in a most shattered condition.

"Two hours and fifteen minutes of bombardment, one man killed, seven wounded, one inferior vessel sunk, and the great effort of the country to retake the forts and public property abandoned as impracticable!

"The reason why Charleston has not been destroyed by the iron-clad fleet, even if Sumter had not been taken, is the dreadful fear that overshadowed the fleet authorities of rebel torpedoes. Farragut had the same to encounter at New Orleans with wooden ships, but he dashed into his work, and considered that the risk of life was a part of the duty of a naval officer; that 'great risks were necessary to secure great results.'

"The Secretary of the Navy sent down here appliances to be used in removing the obstructions in the harbor. These rafts and torpedoes have been here nearly two months, and the attempt to take Charleston has been abandoned without their usefulness being considered for a moment. One of the rafts was taken in by the Wehawken, with grapnels attached to it to catch torpedoes, but they refused to have the torpedoes connected with it. They were afraid the torpedoes might kick backward, although they had been experimented with, and even the raft had not been injured.

"One of these torpedoes, containing seven hundred pounds of powder, would have swept away the obstructions in the harbor, and enabled the fleet yesterday afternoon to go up and bombard the city. They were, however, not used, and this great national retribution is abandoned."

Two days after the battle Mr. Fulton writes:

"Last evening I visited the iron-clads on the steam tug Dandelion, and a more broken-hearted set of men I never had the misfortune to encounter. Each man appeared to regard himself as personally disgraced by the act of his superiors, and aboard the Ironsides the state of feeling among the younger officers and crew was that of supreme disgust."

Gen. Burnside's Order.

It is but a day or two since Gen. Burnside's most salutary order, in reference to rebel sympathisers, was issued, and yet, already, we have promises of the best results from its enforcement in the portions of the Western States afflicted with copperheadism. Take, for example, the following account of it in Cincinnati, given by a correspondent of the Chicago Tribune in that city:

Gen. Burnside's order No. 18, which I sent you last night, already begins to have its effect. You cannot find a man to-day in the city, but who is in favor of supporting the Government and for suppressing the rebellion. Men who have been wearing butternut emblems attached to their watch-guards, on their fingers or shirt bosoms, have promptly removed them, through fear that it would be considered an expression of their sympathies with the rebels. The Union men are loud in their praise of the order, and rebel sympathisers are dumb.

Gen. Burnside is determined that the order shall not be a dead letter. Several arrests of prominent men in Covington and Newport, we hear are to be made for denouncing this order, and they will be sent to Dixie.

Two arrests have already been made under this order, Miss Fanny Battles, daughter of the rebel Gen. Battles, of Davidson county, Tennessee, and Miss Hattie Booker, of Rutherford county, Tennessee, They will be imprisoned at Camp Chase.

Mrs. Semmes, wife of the Captain of the pirate Alabama, who has been residing here all winter, who is violent in her denunciations of our Government and of our cause, has, it is said, been ordered to prepare herself to be sent into the rebel lines.

—Another tells us that the secesh of Covington have been greatly fluttered, and declare that Gen. Burnside "is as bad a beast as Butler."

The Author of "Life in the Iron Mills."

A New York correspondent of the Springfield (Mass.) Republican writes thus of the gifted Miss Harding, of Wheeling:

The May number of the Atlantic will commence a new story by the author of "Life in the Iron Mills," and that reminds me to tell you that Miss Harding has been spending some time in New York with a no less charming and no less notable personage than the wife of Gen. Fremont. Miss Harding is a native of Virginia, and there, during Gen. Fremont's brief campaign, "Our Jessie" first met her. It is difficult to reconcile her bright face, fair, wavy hair, and genial, society manner, with the deep, searching, strong, impassioned, sometimes scathing, currents of her written life. Yet oftenest so. The sea, by reason of its soundless deeps and shoreless scope, saves for itself an outer life of calm, free flow and rhythmic resonence. The sunbeams kindle it—the moonlight refines it—the stars are its jewels—its under world is its mystery and magnetism.

PROTECTION OF BLACK SOLDIERS.—Gen. Hunter, a few weeks ago, made a communication to Gen. Beauregard, giving him formal notice that he should retaliate promptly every outrage or wrong done our black South Carolina or Florida troops who might fall into rebel hands; and he added, what was perhaps the most effective part of his threat, that in choosing rebel prisoners upon whom to retaliate, he proposed carefully to select those who owned the greatest number of slaves. Thus, for every black soldier Beauregard hangs—according to his threat—Gen. Hunter will hang two slaveholders. There will not be many black soldiers hanged by Beauregard.

A VETERAN PATRIOT.—James Gillingham, who was born in Bucks county, Pennsylvania, on the 27th of January, 1768, and is now in his ninety-fifth year, has enrolled his name as a member of the Pottsville Union League. His first vote was cast for Washington. He has attended and voted at every Presidential election since, down to the last, in 1860, when he deposited his ballot for Abraham Lincoln, and he no more regrets the last than the first.
