A Combined Movement of our Armies
A recent dispatch, or, rather, several recent dispatches, from Murfreesboro, give a sufficiently distinct echo of the note of preparation now sounding along the mountain barriers of East Tennessee, to enable us to judge that ROSECRANS will not much longer remain without his present strongly fortified lines. We read that—
Every preparation is making in the Fourteenth Army Corps for the impending battle in the neighborhood of Tullahoma, and which, Gen. Rosecrans shelter tents have been distributed to the army, to be substituted, in case of a movement, for those now in use, which are heavy and cumbersome, and difficult of transportation. The fullest supplies are rapidly concentrating within easy accessibility, and the drying up of the roads, now rapidly going on, will be the signal for a movement on the part of one or the other of the armies.
The army in Kentucky, under the lead of the brave and energetic BURNSIDE, is nearest the great trysting-place, to which also HOOKER'S splendid army will be long, we cannot doubt, begin to move from the east. BURNSIDE, however, will be first to reach the important point of action—where action shall be decisive, and fruitful of great results. A letter from Stanford, Ky., dated the 16th inst., says:
The gathering and pushing forward of troops goes vigorously on. Never before has the Army of Central Kentucky exhibited such energy of intention combined with so much energy and business activity in the details. Discretion and long prayed for and so long The war cry so [illegible] A desperate effort delayed is at last s[illegible] rebels to observe this will be made by the [illegible] urging forward movement. Already they [illegible] Cumberland, and every available man to the Co[illegible] detract making feints at several points [illegible] and embarrass our forces. They realize perfectly the desperate nature of their situation, and we should not expect to succeed without terrible and obstinate opposition. I have visited, during the past few days, the numerous brigades at their respective temporary locations, and I feel assured that our final success is as certain as our plans are judicious, our leader confident, and our means adequate.
As to the movement of the Potomac army, whether it shall be directly toward the same point, or not, it must ultimately turn thitherward, after perhaps having the chance first given it to defeat the rebel army now in East Virginia—or, at least, so much thereof as can be mustered at some point west of Richmond, on their line of communication with Tennessee, which HOOKER is now threatening. A contemporary justly remarks, in reference to this movement:
If from Gordonsville, Hooker turns to the right and pushes down upon Lynchburg, he must inevitably, we think, raise the siege for the evacuation of Richmond; while he will give the rebels such a fright as they have not had in a twelvemonth. For they will see at once his purpose; they will see that he means with every day's march to get closer to our armies in Tennessee and Kentucky, and interpose each day a more solid wedge between the eastern and western divisions of the rebel force. They will see that, if he has audacity as well as capacity, the battle is his before it is fought; that he can oppose his whole force to but a part of theirs; and that only by an almost superhuman activity, with serious losses in territory, can they save their army.
True, our dispatches say that the report of our cavalry having occupied Gordonsville, as was stated a day or two ago, is premature. But that is all it is,—and we shall only have to wait a few days longer for some such beginning of the campaign, and for those movements which will result in the important concentration of our armies indicated in the above remarks.

A Radical Speech by a "Conservative."
Among the speakers at a great Union meeting at Springfield, Ohio, on the 11th inst., was General S. F. Cary, of Cincinnati, well known thereabouts as a "conservative" of the straitest sect. In closing his remarks General Carey said:
Now, a few words on the politics of particular men. I was not in favor of Fremont's proclamation, but I have got religion since then. [Laughter.] This war will not cease until slavery is crushed. It has been the economy of God in all past history to make slaveholding nations fight for the removal of the curse.
Not at first, but now I am in favor of using negroes in any way to assist in putting down rebels. [Cheers.] When we all come to this we can close the war. [Voices, "That's it."] Let us save the Union and the Constitution, and God will take care of the white and black races.
When you hear a man vaporing about Mr. Lincoln's breaking the Constitution, with nothing to say about Jeff. Davis, set him down as a traitor.
If you think Mr. Lincoln weak, then the greater scoundrel you are if you do not help him. [Cheers.]
A rebel has but two rights—a constitutional right to be hung, and a divine right to be d—d—[terrific cheers.] God bless Mr. Lincoln with all his faults. [Roaring applause.]
We are making history; let us pledge to make it well.
The speaker then spoke at length of the marvellous work accomplished by our government in the last two years. He spoke of the sacrifices of mothers and fathers, and in the flowing blood of thousands to leave the heritage of a free government to their grand-children in great peace, and scorned the idea of the nation not being able to meet its debt. He wanted, and should ever demand, the right of way to pilgrimages to the graves of Washington and Clay.
The rebels are guilty of a crime, but we shall be guilty of a greater one if we do not crush them.
The importations of cotton into England during the first quarter of this year have been 310,000 bales, against 206,000 during the corresponding quarter of 1862. The unique of cotton is rapidly increasing in many parts of the world. In the [illegible] President of over one million of acres [illegible] cultivation, and the new crop has turned out well. Asiatic Turkey is also becoming a cotton-growing country; and a railroad has been constructed from Smyrna to Aidin, (forty miles) along the line of which the people are cultivating cotton vigorously.

Adventures in Dixie.
In May, 1861, Arnold Harris visited Buffalo. It was the day of the departure of the 28th regiment for the seat of war, and recognising a number of his friends in the ranks, he enlisted, and marched by their side. Soon after his arrival at the army of the Potomac he was transferred to the naval service and placed in command of the Island Belle, of the Potomac flotilla. A few months later he lost his vessel and applied for another command.
The Department proposed to send him to Richmond to frustrate, if possible, the projects of George N. Sanders, who had just then secured contracts from the rebel government for a navy to be built in England. He accepted the perilous mission, and soon made his way to the Confederate capital. Without any disguise of name or person, he succeeded in acquiring the confidence of the rebel authorities, and established himself on intimate terms with several of the most important officials. His situation, however, was dangerous in the extreme, and he was arrested and confined in Castle Thunder for seventeen days. He was recognized by two Marylanders as the former commander of the Island Belle. Upon his trial he acknowledged the identification, claiming to have done the Confederacy more service while holding a command in the Federal navy than he could have done by openly joining its cause at an earlier day. His audacity triumphed, and he not only obtained an acquittal, but continued to enjoy the confidence of the rebel authorities; or, rather, of all but Benjamin, who was suspicious of him throughout.
Soon after his discharge from Castle Thunder he became a participant of the enterprises of Sanders, who had recently returned from Europe. As soon as Sanders had perfected his arrangements with Jeff. C. Davis, he was to return to England with money and documents necessary to the carrying out of his designs; Reid Sanders, and Harris were to accompany him. The aim of the latter was to secure Sanders' mail. He succeeded in having it arranged that George, with his friends, should proceed by way of Matamoras to Halifax, while Reid Sanders and he, with the documents and dispatches to be taken, were to run the blockade at Charleston, and get to Halifax by way of Nassau. In accordance with this plan, Sanders, junior, and Harris proceeded to Charleston and purchased a yacht, which they loaded with turpentine, and started gaily out, in January last, to slip through the blockading fleet, and make for Nassau. Great interest was taken in the enterprise, and before leaving the voyagers were entertained at a dinner with Beauregard and the leading celebrities of the city.
Meantime, Harris had succeeded in communicating with one of the vessels of the outside fleet, and putting its commander on the watch. The yacht, as she ran out of the harbor, was speedily detected, and subjected to a cannonade which frightened Sanders out of his wits, and made him eager to surrender. The mail bag, heavily freighted with iron, was thrown overboard; but Harris had previously abstracted from it a portmanteau containing the important dispatches and documents, substituting in its stead his own, which happened, in a remarkable coincident, of course, to be its exact counterpart.
The capture of Reid Sanders will be remembered. Harris is at present in Buffalo on a visit to his friends. He ranks as a lieutenant in the navy.
