Address, GAZETTE, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Loyalty to the Government.

Loyalty to the government, and at the same time hostility to the administration of it are so entirely compatible that we feel loth to impress it upon the attention of our readers. Who ever heard, until the Republican party obtained control of the government, that opposition to the measure of an administration was treason to the State?—Pittsburgh Post of Thursday.

Suppose that during the war of 1812-15, which was a small affair compared with this one, an editor had spoken of the administration of Mr. MADISON as the Post has spoken of that of Mr. LINCOLN, into what category would the Democrats of that day have put him? The epithets "Tory!" "Traitor!" would have burst from every lip; and the fellow would have been fortunate had he escaped the infliction of something more serious than words expressive of detestation and opprobrium.

Now let us look at the parties in this great controversy. Who are they? Are they Republicans and Democrats, contending, as they did before the war, and before secession, for their respective principles and for the success of their respective candidates and measures? Is that the kind of a contest in which the administration or, rather, the government is engaged? If so, then the attitude of the Post is justifiable. But if the administration is engaged in a struggle with the enemies of the country, then the case is very materially altered; and this "hostility" which the Post so flippantly avows is treason. One of the "measures" of the administration, for example, is to take Charleston. Will the Post say that it may oppose and thwart that measure, and yet be loyal to the government? But, suppose, for example, that it should say that it is not expedient to attack Charleston at present, and that some other line of military policy would be better, we freely concede its perfect right to do so, and also to call in question the policy of the Proclamation of Emancipation, or to criticise any mere matter of policy; but to avow undiscriminating hostility to the administration puts whoever does so on the side of the traitors in arms, and among those who are giving aid and encouragement to the enemy "in time of war." To criticise the actions of the administration is a right which we not only concede to others, but one which we have exercised very freely ourselves; but to oppose the execution of laws and to resist measures, the object of which is to overcome the rebels in arms, and restore the authority of the Government in the revolted States, is nothing more nor less than treason. So is it treason to attempt to weaken the Government by disaffecting the minds of the people towards it. To denounce those measures which are essential to the salvation of the nation as tyrannical is, in time of war, treason—just as much so as it would be to go into the army and attempt to get up a mutiny.

If the Post and its faction choose to regard this war with their old friends, the rebels, as an old-fashioned political controversy, they may find themselves very unpleasantly mistaken; and their fine-spun but absurd theory of a distinction between the Government and the men whom the Constitution has invested with the powers of Government, may fail them most disastrously in its practical application, in the event of their carrying their "hostility" to the length of overt acts, or even treasonable utterances.

The Late Good News,

Which was sped by the lightning-herald through the great cities of the country, day before yesterday, appears to have been received with great satisfaction every where. The raising of the seige of Washington, North Carolina, success on the Nansemond, success at Corinth, important actual and still more important prospective successes in Louisiana, and the passage of the fleet of iron-clads past the Vicksburg batteries, made up such a cheering batch of news as we have not had for weeks and months, let alone in one day. The tone of the loyal press is as jubilant as that of the copperhead organ is bitter and despondent. But as this vile hissing tribe are still "joined to their idols," we will "let them alone."

A loyal journal thus comments on the new and improved situation of our affairs in the South west in a strain that altogether pleases us, and seems justified by these late events:

The Mississippi river, from Vicksburg to Port Hudson, is now practically in our possession. The six gunboats from above Vicksburg, with the Hartford and the Albatross, make a force sufficient to keep the river clear of the rebels. They will do a still more important service in getting possession of the rivers through which the rebels have kept up communication with Texas, whence they have obtained their chief supplies, not only for the garrisons of Vicksburg and Port Hudson, but, to a great extent, for the whole rebel army.

Direct communication has now been established between General Grant and General Banks, and the forces under both are now acting in co-operation. General Banks, at the last accounts, was marching into the interior of Louisiana, and there were rumors in New Orleans that a battle had already began between his troops and the rebels under Magruder. Gen. Banks was moving towards Red river, whither a part of General Grant's forces have also proceeded. With the aid of the gunboats they can clear that river and its banks of the rebels, and can then combine for the reduction of Port Hudson. The chief fear we have is that the rebels, on finding their supplies from Texas cut off, will abandon Port Hudson, or Vicksburg, or both, and send the armies now defending those places to Tennessee, so as to make an overwhelming force with which to meet Rosecrans.

Whatever may be the ultimate movements of the rebels, it seems to us clear that they will soon be utterly defeated in the region west of the Mississippi, and that the Confederacy will be really and practically cut in twain. It is through Texas that the largest trade with other countries has been carried on by the rebels. Immense quantities of cotton have been sold by them in Mexico, and they have got in exchange munitions and army supplies of every variety. After day before yesterday's glorious news, the complete control of the Mississippi, with a stop to all this, and the advantage that is to be gained is inestimable. Not for many months have we had so much to cheer and encourage us as the latest news from the Southwest.

Lieut. Col. Fry, of the 79th Highlanders, Cameron's Brigade, Gen. Pope's Division, has been appointed Assistant Adjutant General, with the rank of Colonel, and assigned to the command of the Provost Guard of the Army of the Potomac. The duties of this position are very important, and will require the services of a vigilant officer. Col. Fry has been in command of the 79th Highlanders since the battle of Bull Run, and has proved himself a brave and efficient officer. He is a native of Perthshire, Scotland, and has been in this country about twenty years. He is a son-in-law of Mr. Robert Gilfillan, of this city.

The Negro Element in this War.

The rebels and their Northern sympathisers, some time ago, raised a terrible hue and cry over the anticipated negro insurrections that would result from the emancipation of slaves, and over visions of horrible butcheries which their guilty consciences conjured up. But although many thousands of negroes have been set free, these horrors have as yet had no existence, except in the real or feigned apprehensions of those whose object is to maintain the institution of slavery, let what may befal the Union and the country.

But the Army and Navy Gazette, of England, the highest military authority in the world, decidedly justifies even servile insurrection as a means of warfare, and illustrates its position by the admission, that, in the event of a war between Great Britain and France, the latter would be entirely justifiable, under the laws of war, in exciting Hindoos, Musselmen or Arabs to revolt; and if to revolt, how much more justifiable would it be to take such of those races as were willing, into regular organized military service, as our government is doing in the case of the Southern negroes. It would be the sheerest folly not to do it—nay more, it would be a crime not to do it; and that man is either a rebel at heart, or a slave to prejudice, even to the point of dementia, who opposes the policy of so doing.

Our main object, however, is to introduce an extract from the paper of which we have spoken, the principal editor of which is WM. H. RUSSELL the celebrated correspondent of the Times, a man by no means partial to the cause of the Union:

"There is a journal in this metropolis which is the reputed organ of the Confederate States. At all events, the paper has decided Southern proclivities. In the last number it is asserted that civilized nations will think death by powder and ball "is too respectable for men guilty of an attempt to incite an inferior race to an insurrection." The situation arises from a report that Federal officers of a certain negro regiment, which is said to have been taken in Florida, had been sentenced to be shot. This passage is one of many proofs that Americans cannot comprehend the feelings of this country—it may be of any other—regarding the war. The spurring of a portion of an enemy's subjects, inferior or superior in race, is a desirable object to effect—it is quite a legitimate operation of war. If great Britain were engaged in a war with France, nothing would be more warranted in an accurate time than to excite Hindoo, Musselman, or Arab to revolt. No rule of warfare would permit us to treat officers engaged in that service otherwise than as men conducting a legitimate operation. It is a necessary evil of war, in which servile insurrection may be invoked by an invader, to increase the ordinary horrors and calamities of hostile occupation. When some years ago, Southern statesmen, insolent and aggressive, threatened this country with war, it was remarked over and over again, in British journals, that the dispatch of some of our West Indian regiments to Louisiana or the Carolinas might be one of the most formidable agencies to which even our vast belligerent power could retort. Our Southern friends must carry the whole weight of slavery on their backs, in peace or in war. Servile insurrection would be a dreadful evil. It would be a repetition of the Indian revolt of 1857. An inferior race would rise against their masters. But it is an accident and a consequence of any war in which a State of Slaveholders engage. The officers who develop it are as free from any act of vengeance or retaliation as those who fight on the decks of their ships or in the lines of their regiments."

Just, and Good, and Sharp.

The telegraph yesterday brought a dispatch from New York about a railway which was to be laid in Broadway, but which was not very intelligible. The facts are these:

Some speculators, by the force of money, (for money has some power in New York as well as in Pennsylvania) had succeeded in getting a bill through the Legislature, authorising them, as a company, to lay a street railway in Broadway, certainly one of the greatest thoroughfares in the world; and the authority granted was a franchise of such immense value, that some large capitalists were prepared to offer two millions of dollars for it. Yet, from aught that appears, not a cent of benefit was to accrue to the city treasury.

But it so happened that in April, 1832, the Legislature had granted to the Harlem Railroad Company authority "to extend its railroad through such streets of the city as the Mayor, Aldermen, and Commonalty may permit." This gave to that company a clear and undisputed prior claim; so they tripped up the heels of the new company by asking and obtaining from the Common Council "permission to extend their railroad from their Fourth avenue track, near the point of its intersection with Fifteenth street, southerly through Broadway, by double track, to the foot of Whitehall street, connecting at Park Row with their present track—with liberty to extend a single track around Bowling Green and through State street to the foot of Whitehall street, with the switches and turnouts necessary for the convenient transaction of the business; and also to extend their railroad, with double track, from Fourth avenue through Twenty-third street to Madison avenue, and thence up Madison avenue to eighty-sixth street."

For this privilege the old Harlem Company agrees to pay monthly into the city treasury one-tenth of the gross revenue of the road, and also $25 a car—all together a handsome item of revenue.

West Virginia.

The President has issued his proclamation, in conformity with the law of Congress, announcing the admission of the State of West Virginia as a member of the American Union; the prescribed changes in her Constitution having been made.

Sixty days after the date of that proclamation the new organization goes into operation, which will be Monday, the 24th day of June. On the fourth Thursday of May an election is to be held for State officers and members of the Legislature. A convention is to be held at Parkersburg on the 6th of May, to nominate candidates for Governor and other State officers.

Thus has a new bright star emerged from the dark cloud of secession, rebellion and war. Long may it shine, mounting higher and higher in the heavens, ever increasing in strength and brilliancy, until that beautiful region of mountains and valleys shall be filled with happy homes, schools, churches, bright-eyed boys and girls—smiling with bountiful harvests, and resounding with the hum of industry and the glad voices of a happy people.

The Yazoo Pass Expedition—Great Damage Inflicted on the Rebels.

A letter from Helena to the Philadelphia Press says, in reference to the Yazoo Pass Expedition:

The expedition is so far a great success in this, that it has entirely destroyed all prospects for crops of any kind on the Yazoo Pass, on the Cold Water and on the Tallahatchie.... In addition to the above very important item, all the cotton, cotton gins, plantation houses and negro quarters, all the corn and all the cattle, and all the fences on these streams were utterly destroyed; besides, the rebel loss in killed and wounded, and in prisoners and from desertion, was very considerable. Their greatest loss, however, was in the very large amount of cotton they destroyed to keep us from getting it, and the loss of a great number of their negroes, who were brought out under the provisions of the President's proclamation, and in the complete demoralization of what were left. A portion of the negroes that the Yazoo Pass expedition caused to leave their masters, are now drilling at this point as Federal soldiers.

She breaking of the levees in getting into the Pass will destroy all the country adjacent to our route, and will render the whole upper portion of the State of Mississippi so sickly, that it will be impossible for their armies to remain in the localities we have just visited. The same may be said of all the Lake Providence country and that of Vicksburg, and, in fact, of all the States on the Mississippi river—for the levees are broken from Memphis to New Orleans, and cannot soon be repaired, for the negroes won't work, and Southern chivalry have to fight not only the Yankees but starvation.

OIL CITY TOWN LOTS.
A PUBLIC SALE
Of Town-Lots, in the new town opposite Oil City, Pa., on the Allegheny River, will take place on the ground, at 10 o'clock on Tuesday, April 28th, 1863.

The location is the most desirable for a town in the oil region. The surface is about forty feet above the river at the bank, and rises gradually as it recedes, giving a grand view of the River, Oil City, and the Valley of Oil Creek, together with the surrounding country for a mile above and below.

There are TWO SPRINGS on the site, at a sufficient elevation to carry the water through pipes into every house.

Brick, Lime, Stone and Lumber, for building purposes, are in great abundance in the vicinity.

TERMS OF SALE—$50 on day of sale; one half the purchase money on receiving the deed, one-fourth in six months, and the balance in twelve months, with interest.

For further particulars apply to
WM. L. LAY,
Oil City, Venango County, Pa.
