"Some people," says the N. Y. Times, "are afraid that the return of these regiments will so weaken Hooker's army as to make speedy operations impossible. This and even these will not all be taken from Hooker's army; and as an official report, published by authority the other day, magnanimously informed the rebels and us that Hooker had a strength of 159,328 men, it will be seen that the loss of the two years' regiments ought not to furnish an excuse for naction. Beside the two years'men from this their number is small." We may add that the number of Pennsylvania regiments, (nine menths' men), whose term of service probably increase the above estimated ten or twelve thousand to fifteen or sixteen thousand. But the army under Hooker, according to the foregoing estimate, will still considerably exceed one hundred and forty thousand men. The Methodist Church on Slavery At a late meeting of the New York East bers. This was followed by numerous patriotic addresses. Gen. Woot and the Hon. M. P. ODELL spoke. They found six hundred soldiers, and before they left the whole company of wounded men united in singing the well-known Methodist hymn, "On Jordan's stormy banks I stand," to the tune of "Coronation," and such singing he had never heard before. He ventured to say that every loyal State in the Union was represented by Methodist seldiers in that congregation. He (Mr. Odell) shouted, and the Gevernor cried.
