Pittsburgh Gazette.

MONDAY MORNING, MAY 25.

THE news from Gen. GRANT'S army is of such thrilling interest and transcendent importance, that, till the record shall be more completely made up, by fuller details than we have yet received, it would be unprofitable to attempt, and perhaps equally impossible to succeed in presenting, a connected view of the whole splendid series of operations which appear to have resulted so gloriously. We therefore, leave our readers to the exhilerating study of our dispatches, and trust that considerable additions of details will be made to those now before us, filling up the grand outline sketched already, before we go to press.

The Restoration of Louisiana.

The usual phenomena attending natural storms is likely to be realized in the case of our great national commotion. For a time the whole heaven is dark with clouds—lightning flashes, thunder crashes and reverberates, and everything is in wild agitation, and enshrouded in gloom. By and by the storm cloud begins to lift in the west, and the calm pure light of heaven streams in, and more and more of the beautiful azure, where the sun shines and the stars twinkle, spreads abroad, and then all is peace—more sweet, more refreshing, more resplendant than that which prevailed before.

So in our great day of darkness and trouble, the first glimpse of clear sky, betokening the return of peace, is descried in the West. Missouri, torn for nearly two years with the most terrific tempest, is now calm, and rejoicing in the fresh light of freedom. Arkansas is nearly settled; but the most astonishing revolution and translation has been effected in Louisiana. No State was more under the rule of the Slave power, or more thoroughly wedded to the fortunes of the Confederacy; and none has been half so sternly and rigidly coerced, first by the inexorable, the "rough and ready" Butler, and latterly by the equally stern, but perhaps more moderate, Banks. It was one of the hardest and most impracticable sections of all rebeldom. No slave aristocracy was so rich, so haughty, so utterly stiff-necked and rebellious, as that of Louisiana, and it required the strong hand of Butler to deal with it at first, and break up that hard fallow ground; but he did it amid both the applauses and the execrations of mankind. It was the finest example ever seen of the virtues of good wholesome coercion—not of crushing Liberty under the heel of power, but of snubbing and suppressing traitors who had violated the very temple of Liberty.

"A year ago this month, (says the New York Times,) Louisiana, thus affected, was in part reconquered by force. The part thus repossessed, was ruled by force, under Gen. BUTLER, and with a rigor that has been talked about the world over. The hatred of New Orleans to the Federal authority, at the time of its capture, was every whit as intense as was that of captured Rome against the French, or of recaptured Venice against the Austrians; and in the subsequent rule there was far less accommodation by the conquerors to the established social system and to the old municipal regulations. Gen. BUTLER had hardly got the city reduced to order before he began striking at the old relation of master and slave, the peculiarly sensitive part of Southern society. He not only practically destroyed this relation, but he soon unceremoniously assailed the deepest and most inveterate prejudices that ever had a hold in Southern nature, by beginning to transform those who had been slaves into trained and armed soldiers, who should help him maintain his rule. He carried on that system, so shocking to every Southern sensibility, as long as he remained in the department. His successor, Gen. BANKS, instead of relaxing it, drove it forward with still greater vigor, and the last that we hear is of his "General Orders No. 20," for the organization of a "corps d'armee of colored troops to consist ultimately of eighteen regiments representing all arms—infantry, artillery, cavalry—making nine brigades of two regiments each, and three divisions of three brigades each, with appropriate corps of engineers, and flying hospitals for each division." Gen. BUTLER, so far as he well could, broke down the old system of slavery, yet in such a way as made its restoration possible; but Gen. BANKS has gone further, and established a system of hired black labor, which practically operates to make the destruction of slavery absolute and irretrievable.

Regarding, then, rebel Louisiana in its original status as committed thoroughly to the Confederacy, its capture exclusively by force of arms, and the policy which has since been exercised upon it, so radically opposed to every sentiment and habit of its former society, we certainly are entitled to consider the trial of restoring it cordially to the Union in this fashion, as a crucial test of the coercive principle. If such a State can be made loyal in such a way, the whole question is settled. What has been done in Louisiana, can be done, with the same opportunity, in any part of the Confederacy? Well, what has been done there? Has any change been wrought upon the people, and, if so, what?"

The New Orleans correspondent of the New York Herald, a paper that opposes everything like abolitionism with far more heartiness than it opposes treason or secession, says in a recent letter:

"A significant fact in the present condition of affairs is found in the movements of the planters. These men are not politicians, and although assenting to the rebellion, and, since the secession of the State, sympathising, if not participating, with the rebels, they are governed now with reference to their own interest they set together. Recently they had two meetings, of which no notice has been taken by the public, and to which no reference has been made by the newspapers. The condition of the South, of the rebel government, and of the Federal army, have been fully discussed. Their judgment is worth attention, and the conclusion of all their deliberations has been that they will at once take efficient measures to aid in the restoration of the Government of the Union in this State; and, not content with acting for this city, of which they are citizens, they will advise the planting interest of all the Southern States to pursue the same course. They repeat with great earnestness the declaration of the Governor of Georgia, that the Federal Government has been more consistent in its recognition of State rights than that of the Confederacy. Preparations have been made for the publication of a newspaper, which will appear as an distant day, advocating their views. The restoration of the State to the Union will necessarily be based upon the ideas as to Slavery which the President has proclaimed in his message to Congress, though this subject has not been specially considered.

* * * Everywhere Union spirit is gaining in power, and the Union party in numbers and strength. It is not too much to say that within the next six months the State of Louisiana will be added to the Union, represented by a Government of loyal men, covering the whole territory of the State, and that five members of Congress will be elected by the people."

A correspondent of the New Orleans Era, writing from Opelousas, says:

A gentleman intimately acquainted with a majority of the planters of this and the neighboring parishes, informed me that the estimate made by them of the number of bales opened up to the world in the country already occupied by our troops, would not fall short of two hundred thousand bales, and our advance would soon throw as much more on the market. It has been hid in the woods and all other imaginable places, by the planters, to keep their friends, the rebel soldiers, from burning it, and I have not heard of one who was not willing and glad to have an opportunity of selling it to the Yankees.

Nor is this the only result of this most glorious campaign of General Banks. It is now beyond doubt that the majority of the planters, and residents generally of the interior, are loyal to the Government of the United States. Numbers of them have expressed a willingness and desire to take the oath of allegiance, and are only waiting the opening of books by the General to do so at once.

A Cry of Despair from Richmond.

The last letter of the Southern correspondent of the London Times is written from Richmond; and if its tone is the tone of the rebel leaders there, their situation must be even more desperate than it has been thought here. "Help us at once, or we perish!" is the only meaning of his long appeal, of which we cite the concluding sentences as a fair example of the spirit of the whole:

"It may be that the civilized powers of Europe, standing as they do upon a higher level than it is possible that I can occupy, may see no hope of successful moral interference. But if they could only witness the misery which is, from every acre of this once favored continent, crying aloud to Heaven, it could scarcely be but that they would risk some chance of failure rather than permit humanity to be outraged by a continuance of such excess of anguish as has visited no nation since the sword first leaped from its scabbard, and the human heart was first sown with the bitter seed of vindictiveness and hate."

Whose suffering it is that thus excites the horror and the pity of the Times correspondent we may gather from a preceding sentence:

"Another thought is continually finding expression [in the South]—it is that the two sections do not fight on level ground. The North is flooding her armies with recruits who are, three-fourths of them, foreigners, many of them taken from the emigrant ships at Castle Garden; the South is sending into the field the very life-blood of her body politic."

This means that the slaveholders think it unfair to be pitted against "common mudsills" in the Union armies—and this English flunkey agrees with them.

The Movement Against Charleston—Our Forces Gradually Approaching the City.

A letter in the Toledo (Ohio) Blade from a soldier on Folly Island, near Charleston, says:

I see that the correspondent of the New York Times intimates that our iron-clads were repulsed, and says that "Charleston is impregnable." He may be able to make some persons believe such stories, but we, who are in plain view of Sumter and surroundings, know better. If Charleston is not in our possession within one month, some person or persons high in authority ought to sink so deep in oblivion that the loudest notes of Gabriel's horn would fail to reach them.

Folly Island, which we now hold, runs along the coast from Stono Inlet north, and is only separated from Morris Island by a narrow stream, which at low tide is almost fordable. The island is about eight miles long, and a mile and a half wide, and commands Morris Island, and on which we can plant batteries that, with the aid of the gunboats, we can shell them off of Morris Island in eight hours time; and, once in possession of Morris Island, we have Cumming's Point, on which we can plant siege guns, with which we could batter down Fort Sumter—the sand hills being perfect protection from the shot and shell of Forts Sumter and Moultrie.

We are fortifying this island and preparing for a further advance. The old Sixty-seventh is now encamped within three and a half miles of Fort Sumter.

IN HIS advance from Port Gibson Gen. Grant captured two immense piles of bacon, each covering an area of 2,500 square feet, piled as high as the branches of the forest trees, and each containing, by estimate, 40,000 pounds. The rebels, not expecting Grant to advance, had piled up the bacon in the woods, where our boys, when advancing, found it.

SEVENTY-FOUR manumitted negroes, former slaves of secessionists from Missouri, were stopped, a few days since, after they had crossed the Mississippi at Millersville, near Quincy, Illinois, and robbed of all the arms and money they had, and then turned loose. The robbers were Illinois copperheads.

A CORRESPONDENT of the Philadelphia Inquirer writes from the Rappahannock that numbers of deserters are daily making their way into our lines, while not a few of the rebel pickets are made willing prisoners.

THE Utica (N. Y.) Herald suggests the erection of a county monument, to bear the name of every soldier from the county who has fallen or may fall in this war for the Union, as a fitting recognition of departed valor, and an incentive to noble deeds on the part of others—a suggestion that is both sensible and patriotic.

TO RAILROAD CONTRACTORS.—Sealed Proposals will be received by the Allegheny Valley Railroad Company, at their office on Fifth street, in the City of Pittsburgh, until 6 o'clock p. m., on THURSDAY, June 10th, 1863, for the construction and masonry of Sections Nos 47 and 48 of their road, each about one mile in length. No. 47 ends and No 48 begins at the mouth of Crawhanon Creek, four miles above the present terminus of the road at Kittanning.

The line will be properly staked, and profiles and specifications prepared for exhibition by the 1st of June next; but should any desire to examine the work previous to that time, they can obtain all the information necessary to enable them to do so in a satisfactory manner, on application to F. WASSET, Engineer and Superintendent of the Road, at his office in Pittsburgh. FELIX R. BRUNOT,
