Gerrit Smith's Speech at the Utica Union League Convention. We give a few extracts from the speech f Gerrit Smith, delivered at Utica on the 26th:

The Suex Canal.

A number of years ago, M. Lessers, a French: engineer, made an arrangement with the Vicercy of Egypt, subject to the approval and sanction of the Sultan of Approval and sanction of the Sultan of Turkry, for the privilege of constructing a ship enail from the Meditegranean to the Bed Sea, deboughing into the latter at Sur. It appears that M. Lessers never obtained the sanction of the Sultan, but went on with the work in some kind of conjunction with the Vicercy, the latter at Sur. It appears that M. Lessers never obtained the sanction of the Sultan, but went on with the work in some kind of conjunction with the Vicercy, the latter translating laborers by conscription, 20, 000 at the sun of the Sultan but went on with the work in some kind of conjunction with the Vicercy, the latter through the sun of the Sultan but the sun of the sun of the Sultan but the S jealousies of the great commercial powers, it has been delayed until now, and may that for there are many good men who do not like the present boundaries of our controlling to would be to open a maratime highway between Europe and the East Indies, China Australia, and all the vast regions, continental and insular, washed by the Indian and Pacific Oceans, without having to double the Southern cape of either Africa or America.

It is clear that the nation which succeeds in achieving such a work as this, and controlling it when finished, would acquire a footing in Egypt against which the public power of the Sultan would be as nothing; and it was that consideration doubtless, which induced the Sultan to visit Egypt a few weeks ago and put his foot upon it. He ordered the work to be suspended until he received such guarantees as the safety of his empire required. He says that the commany having commenced to work at the commany having the commany having the commany having the commany having the co

This is an exceedingly liberal offer on the part of the Sultan, as he agrees to pay debts which he never incurred, and the offer is more remarkable when it is observed that the original contract between Egypt and M. Lessers made the censent of the Porte indispensable, and that M. Lessers promised to obtain that consent in eighteen meaths, and had never done so.

It is very probable that the finger of Great Britain, and perhaps of Bussia, is in the action of the Sultan. The Sultan moreover, protested against the system of forced labor onder which the enterprise was being prosecuted. He, however, seems determin-labor under which the enterprise was being prosecuted. He, however, seems determined that if the work is to be accomplished at all, it shall be done by his own authority, and not be made a means of sapping that authority and menacing the integrity of his empire.
