For President Judge of the District Court. MOSES HAMPTON.

Religion--Colonel Montgomery's Proceedings Explained.

The destruction of private property by Colonel Montgomery in his recent raid in Georgia, Florida and South Carolina, has been made the subject of much misadversion, not only by the rebel-sympathizing journals, which would naturally feel acutely for their friends--

But also by several journals, whose conduct was wholly dictated by a regard for the honor of our flag, which ought not to sanction any proceeding contrary to the well-established and generally recognized laws and usages of civilized warfare.

And an editorial article in the N. Y. Evening Post, of Wednesday, which makes the important statement of the holding of orders, or contrary to orders, Col. Montgomery in these raids acted under the orders of Major General Hunter, and was but fulfilling the dreadful but necessary penalties of the law of retaliation on the piratical sea-rovers and incendiaries of the rebel "Confederacy."

Was on Land and Sea. Montgomery was dunned by the troops under Col. Montgomery. It was not the good old South that was the object of his attack, but the rebel army, and care was taken that the work of destruction should be complete.

The Jacob Bell was dunned by Captain Semmes. It was not an accident--on the contrary, the fire was judiciously distributed, so that every part of the ship and her precious cargo should be destroyed.

The houses of Darwin were private property. So was the good old Jacob Bell. She was little in flames yesterday off the Massachusetts coast, with a rebel ship lying near to insure their destruction, and the chasing still others of the fleet.

To doubt the rebels will cry out against the destruction of Darwin as a barbarous act. So it is; but in what way does it differ from the burning of helpless merchant ships and fishing schooners, which has been practiced so long by the rebels?

Of course no subordinate officer has the right to order acts of retaliation. That belongs to the government, or to the general-in-chief of the armies. But when the order is given, the subordinate who carries it into effect is protected by it. Retaliation in war is like reprisals during peace.

Banquet to Gen. Meagher.

One evening last week about two hundred of the personal friends of this gallant Irish soldier, gave him a banquet at the Astor House, New York.

The Chairman then introduced General Thomas Francis Meagher, and in concluding presented him with a magnificent designed gold medal, upon which is inscribed the names of all the battles in which the Irish Brigade was engaged.

Gen. Meagher, in reference to the call, rose mid loud cheers, and made an eloquent speech, in the course of which he paid a high tribute to the Irish Brigade, complimenting the men for their services in aiding to put down the rebellion, and restoring the career of Irish soldiers on every battle-field in Europe.

After a review of the condition of the country, he concluded by saying it was better that the taxes should be multiplied, than that trade should be paralyzed, and that millions should perish on the field with their country's flag pointed to the sun and the glory of the martyrs, that gaily should pour mourning; that luxury should get down upon its knees and beg a crust; that the letters and the correspondence of the warehouse and the palace, and the fate of Tyne and Dealbees be its visitation.

After all this a thousand times than the people for the sake of having a glut of foreign importations, of being corrupted and at the same time the holding of orders, or audacious demagogues clamor for and insist upon a peace which would annihilate their sovereignty, blighting their history with the crime of suicide and an irrevocable sentence of ineffable disgrace.

The Secession Element in Baltimore.

How the Fious Rebels Behave at Prayers. A correspondent of the Philadelphia Press writes that in the churches of Baltimore many persons remain at the doors of the churches on Sunday until the prayers for the President have been recited. He adds: "It is an informed source it is no uncommon thing for worshippers either to go during the recital of these prayers, or to show their contempt by refusing to assume the devotional attitude which various denominations adopt as peculiar to prayer."

On Sunday I visited the great Cathedral of Archbishop Kenrick, not because of any expectation to witness a demonstration such as I speak of, but through curiosity, having remembered that he had been Bishop of Philadelphia. The Archbishop, Baltimore comprises principally the congregation of the Cathedral. It may be here stated that the archdiocese of Bishop Kenrick includes all of Virginia as well as Maryland, and the city of Richmond is as much his home as the city of Baltimore.

No diastolical sentiment or sympathy has ever been impugned by Bishop Kenrick. On the contrary, he is known to give the government the hearty support, and it is not frequently expressed publicly, it is certain that a sympathy for the rebellion has never been expressed as that he is certainly in an anomalous position, and as a faithful shepherd over a loyal and disloyal flock, he never neglects, however, to recite the prayer for our country, and to sing a hymn which instructs his priests to do likewise. It would be well if his congregation manifested the same respect for the Government.

"On Sunday this venerable old man preached at the Cathedral. He was full dressed in the holding of orders, and his head gray with years, but his voice and manner bearing all the vigor of his early manhood. He said that five years ago he was in the city of Baltimore, and that he was then a member of the congregation of the Cathedral. He said that he was then a member of the congregation of the Cathedral, and that he was then a member of the congregation of the Cathedral.

"The voice of the Archbishop continued, and that the prayers for the Government were recited in these United States; give him strength and wisdom to direct the affairs of the nation, he said. The prayer proceeded, and he gave the blessing upon the Governor of Maryland, and then resumed: 'I pray for the success of the Government, and for the success of the Government, and for the success of the Government.'
