WEDNESDAY MORNING, JULY 1.

Union County Ticket.

For President Judge of the District Court. MOSES HARTMAN. For Assembly. J. JOHN B. HARRIS. H. H. HARRIS. W. H. HARRIS. For County Clerk. W. M. HARRIS. For County Treasurer. DAVID HARRIS. For County Auditor. ADRIAN HARRIS. For County Commissioner. W. M. HARRIS. For Director of the Poor. JOHN H. HARRIS.

The Situation.

All the elements of this tremendous war are in active motion. The operations upon Vicksburg were going on vigorously on the 28th ult., the latest dates we have. The story of a great repulse on the 22d, published in the Chattanooga Rebel, is a pure fabrication. General Rosecrans is once more in motion, and appears to be carrying all before him. The details will be found on the fourth page.

The reported advance of 40,000 rebels into Kentucky, if true, is rather startling news. It is, however, probably nothing more than another "news" similar to several we have had within the past few months.

But the movements of the armies of the Union and of the Confederacy in Maryland and Pennsylvania are what at present absorb the public mind. When Lee crossed the Potomac, General Hooker, it is generally believed, placed his army on the line of the Monocacy, where he could at once cover Washington and Baltimore, and render an advance by the rebels into Pennsylvania a very hazardous operation.

It is not known at present where the main body of Lee's army is. Some assert that his headquarters are at Chambersburg; but this is, we think, quite improbable; nor do we believe the stories we hear of such large bodies of rebel troops being in Pennsylvania. Bands of predatory horsemen have been doing about, supported by some artillery and possibly some infantry; and it is their policy of course to give out the frightened population stories of advancing armies of ten, fifteen, twenty, and even thirty thousand—stories which they, in their shameful stupidity, believe as verity, but magnify. Lee having been swept across the Potomac at all, nothing better could have been done by our army than had been done; and Lee's army where it may—in Pennsylvania or Maryland—mediating a sudden dash upon Baltimore or Washington, General Meade is in position to checkmate it and bring on a battle as soon as he deems it expedient to do so. With Meade in his rear it is impossible for Lee to maintain his position in Pennsylvania, or even north of the Potomac, for any length of time, unless he can defeat his antagonists in a great battle.

My last letter will have given you an idea of the superior condition, both morally and materially, of the army. The halcyon phrase of "litterally true" the men are for the gray. It is possible that we may be more fortunate than I at present look for. I pray Heaven we may be! We may be able, by a rapid and vigorous advance, to compel a battle that will be more or less decisive, and a cavalry expedition to cut off their railroad communications with Chattanooga is on the program. We shall also be looking to feed their already pinched soldiers. If we get command of the line of the Potomac, it will probably be made an eventual base. The railroad track between here and Sharpsville, with the exception of about twenty miles, is said to be entirely undisturbed, and we shall be able to bring up supplies rapidly. For the present days, rations—three days in the haversacks of the men and nine in the wagons.

Gen. Meade. Gen. Meade, the successor of Gen. Hooker, is already pretty well known to the country as a corps commander in the Army of the Potomac. He has not figured quite so prominently as some others, though his corps (the Fifth Army Corps) is second in discipline and condition to the First and Fifth Corps having been held as reserves. The confidence of all the corps commanders and of all the officers of the army in Gen. Meade is very high, and we may now state that after the late battle at Chancellorsville his appointment to succeed Gen. Hooker was urged by every corps commander, with perhaps one exception. There is no doubt, however, that Gen. Meade is a man of high ability, and one whom they generally designate as their first choice. The other next in rank to Gen. Meade is himself, and Gen. Meade is himself decidedly the first choice. His intellectual characteristics are sagacity, decision and firmness, with, of course, all the other soldierly qualifications, and he has also education and experience.—New York Times.

Gen. Meade is far better known in the Army of the Potomac than by the public, though his reputation with the latter is high. No general possesses more—no think none to such—the confidence of the army, and especially of the confidence of his generals. He is an officer of extraordinary energy and of unquestionable devotion to the cause which the army now under his command must defend from imminent deadly peril. His services in the present war have been conspicuous, yet his capacity to handle a large army, and that army in such a position as the army of the Potomac at present, is to be proved by trial only. The time is past when personal partialities or prejudices can be indulged. The question is: Who shall save the Republic? In the emergency that General Meade is the man to whom the responsibility just resting upon him, we bid him God speed in his momentous task.—N. Y. Tribune.

A call appears in the Nashville papers, signed by Horace Maynard, W. G. Brown, and eight other Tennessee loyalists, calling on those who desire to maintain the State Government in connection with the Federal Union as it stood prior to the rebellion, and the war, to meet in Convention by their delegates, at the capital in Nashville, on the 1st of July.

CONVENTION OF THE GOVERNMENT.—A meeting of the Convention of the Government, the impending battle, likely to be fought within a very few days upon the soil of Maryland or of Pennsylvania, is looked forward to from the highest quarters without apprehension. It is believed that with our numerical superiority, and our position in a friendly country, we cannot, if our soldiers are handled with any skill, be beaten.

A Norfolk letter says that the courts were organized on the 6th instant for the first time in Norfolk since its occupation by the United States forces.

Rosecrans' Advance.—The Operations Campaign in Middle Tennessee.

Mr. Stewart, the intelligent correspondent of the N. Y. Times with Rosecrans' army, in a letter written on the 24th, just as the army commenced its movement, gives the following interesting coup-d'oeil of the opening campaign: Our strategic maneuver, I take it, will be on the enemy's right flank, and will endeavor, if possible, to grasp his communication. Many here are of the opinion that Bragg will not make a stand at Shelbyville, Tullahoma, or, indeed, anywhere along the line of the Duck; but that he will, after embarrassing our progress as much as possible, fall back to the line of the Tennessee river, in the vicinity of Chattanooga.

It is, of course, possible that he may do so; and this would certainly be a course that would not jump with our wishes, as we should have made our march for nothing, and added thirty miles to a line of communication already too deep. A movement against Chattanooga at this time and with our present force, I fear, out of the question. There are, however, several considerations that will prevent him from holding on to his present position; and if he abandons it, it will be because his force has lately been so much reduced that he fears a battle. His retreat will give up to us the whole of this region of Middle Tennessee, in which a crop of cereals is at the present moment ripening, and which will be a detail of our communications already too deep. A movement against Chattanooga at this time and with our present force, I fear, out of the question.

With reference to the all-important question touching the strength of the Union and of the Confederacy in Maryland and Pennsylvania are what at present absorb the public mind. When Lee crossed the Potomac, General Hooker, it is generally believed, placed his army on the line of the Monocacy, where he could at once cover Washington and Baltimore, and render an advance by the rebels into Pennsylvania a very hazardous operation.
