What would most probably—we trust we salvation of the country from the mechinations and confidence to the people, at this juncture, is precisely that which, above all things, cannot be made known. We refer, of course, to the movements and the position of our army, to which is committed the Table. One thing we learn from the fact that no attempt was made to resist the late crossing of the Upper Potomac by the rebels, and their advance in force into Maryland and their advance in force into Maryland and Pennsylvania, is that, on the whole, it The invasion. was deemed safer to keep our army east of South Mountain, while LEE was in a conto invade Maryland and Pennsylvania, or the more liable at times to be wrong-headed been secured. to approach Washington on the north rather and obstinate, citizens, whose loyalty will be

We may, and indeed decidedly we do regret that Hooker did not anticipate LEE in seizing the passes of the Blue Ridge mountains; for if he had, even such an advance into Maryland and Pennsylvania as he has already made, would utterly preshould sustain a defeat in battle. But we need not, in that case, speak of such an ad-Vance at all, for, unless he had been struck man; and we trust the same fate awaits the been made mad in order that he might be destroyed, LEE never would have sent more than detachments of cavalry and artillery into Maryland or Pennsylvania.

Even as it is, with the passes in his possession, Lzz is doubtless already impressed with the conviction of his exposed situstion, with a powerful army approaching feetion, that they can gain their point by it and force him to a battle in a hostile country.
