This fact was found by s committee appointed by himself, under the pressure of a public clamor, which grew out of the treatment of the volunteers who had assembled at Harrisburg. Those brave Joung men who had responded so gener ously to the first call of their country, were in rags, with shoddy vestments, shoes and believed that they had been given over speculators who were then hovering about the capital. The officers at Camp Curtin, justly indignant at what they saw, drew up a spirited remonstrance to the Legisla-House, at their instance, by one of our own simply, that it more directly and speedily ety of an inquiry as to the nature of the contracts made for supplies, and the names of the spents, through whom they were made, and he offered a resolution accordingly. He wished to know, and to let the public know, whether it was true that sundry individuals then loitering around the capital, who were pointed out by the tongue of rumor, and known to be entirely unfitted for the purpose, had been actually commissioned by the Governor, as his agents, to make contracts for the soldiers. One of these individuals was a certain CHARLES M.
