Democracy—Here and in Kentucky.

The Post of Saturday publishes, without condemnation or criticism, a letter from Covington, Ky., on the late election,—whining over the copperhead defeat, and attempting to explain it away—in which the following passage occurs: "Wishing our Democratic friends in the North to know the measures that were adopted by the Union party to carry their point, &c." Does the Post admit the distinction to be a proper one, which its correspondent draws, between Unionists and Democrats in Kentucky? And does this information to "our Democratic friends in the North" imply that the party is the same here as there, in its distinct opposition to the Union? If the Democracy is a unit, in sentiment and purpose, how can it oppose the Union in Kentucky, and in Pennsylvania claim that the "only way to restore and preserve the Union is through a triumph of the Democratic party?" There is a foggyness in this which is very perplexing, and which we would gladly see dissipated, even by a neat quotation from Shakspeare, if one can be found.

From Grant's Department---The Situation---The Fall Campaign, etc.

The following interesting information respecting affairs in Grant's Department, we find in a letter by "Vocative," a correspondent of the N. Y. Tribune, written on the 27th ult., at Vicksburg:

THE SITUATION.

The main portion of the troops belonging to the Department of the Tennessee are now in and around Vicksburg. Gen. McPherson's army corps is employed in garrisoning the post, and has been since its occupation. Gen. Logan's division, belonging to this corps, is encamped within the city limits, Gen. L. doing duty as Post Commandant until a few days past, when he went through on a furlough, and his duties then devolving upon Brig. Gen. J. E. Smith. Col. Kent is Provost Marshal.

The expeditions to Jackson has returned. The troops employed in the expedition were Sherman's Army Corps, the 15th, commanded by Gen. Steele, the 13th Army Corps, Gen. Ord commanding, with Lauman's division of the 16th Army Corps attached, a portion of the 16th and 9th army Corps, commanded by Gen. Parker, and McArthur's division of Gen. McPherson's Corps—in all about four army Corps, the whole commanded by Gen. Sherman. These several commands are now encamped around the city. Gen. Ord's being on the flat just below, while the remainder are scattered about, a portion being on the line of works extending from Haine's Bluff to Big Black. Gen. Herron's Corps has been sent down the river to occupy and hold Natchez, I suppose.

The result of the expedition to Jackson may be stated briefly to be the destruction by fire of the town, and the driving Gen. Johnston and his army further into the interior. This statement of the result makes it seem insignificant; but I presume that nothing more important was intended or expected. The march to Jackson from the Big Black was a very hard one; but the return was performed, accomplished in three days, by Ord's corps, was sixth harder. Some of the veterans of this corps, who have experienced nearly everything possible in the way of marching, assure me that nothing ever equaled it. The men were more than ever known before. They were compelled to use water from the pools and lagoons on the route; rations were whittled down almost to the starvation point, and the heat was terrific.

Johnston skirmished with Sherman on a small scale until the latter arrived in the neighborhood of Jackson, and invested the place. On the 13th, Gen. Lauman's division was sent in upon the enemy on ground which that General was ordered to reconnoiter. It was an unfortunate affair. One brigade of the division was badly cut up, and the loss in killed and wounded now foots up 700. For this assault, which was alleged to have been cautery, to orders, Gen. Lauman was relieved of his command by Gen. Ord, and Gen. Hovey now commands this division in addition to his own division.

On the 17th inst. it was discovered that Johnston had evacuated during the night, after destroying all war material that he could not take away with him. As soon as this was known, our troops entered the place. The men of Lauman's Division were exasperated by the losses which their ranks had sustained, and commenced a destruction of the houses by fire, which was kept up until there was but little left of the town but ashes.

Jackson has been an ill-fated place. When it was captured before, there was a great destruction worked. Joe Johnston caused one or two of the main blocks of buildings to be burned before he evacuated, and the work commenced was finished on the 17th and 18th. Where was but lately a thriving and pretentious town of between four and five thousand inhabitants, with a State-House, Lunatic Asylum, and many other public buildings, there is now a heap of ruins. The fate of the inhabitants of Vicksburg has been enviable beside that of the people of Jackson.

The country between here and Jackson is represented as being completely devastated. Between the two armies which have been marching and countermarching over it, it has been ground to powder. The town of Raymond has been spared this destruction, I learn—for what reason I do not know.

WHAT IS TO BE DONE?

There are no indications that I can discover as yet, of any very active movements in this quarter soon. In fact, I incline to the opinion that the next six or eight weeks will be employed by Gen. Grant in quiet preparation for an active and decisive Fall campaign. There is urgent need for this preparation. This army has been in the field a long time, and the wear and tear, so to speak, has been tremendous. In every department, repairs and reforms are needed. The organization of the army needs an overhauling. It seems particularly necessary, owing to the incidents of the campaign ending with the capture of Vicksburg and the destruction of Jackson, that the entire army should be brigaded anew. If our old regiments are ever to be filled up by recruits or drafted men, now is the time to do it. There are many, alas, too many regiments, represented here by mere squads of men. To fill up or to consolidate these regiments requires time and much clerical labor.

Our army regulations are such that it is impossible to put and keep things in such shape that they will work satisfactorily without consuming a great deal of time. The intricate system of checks and balances in the army, under which we are operating, and which has come to be called red tape, works out delays the necessity for which few civilians can comprehend, and which no General, however energetic, can prevent.

There is another reason why this army should remain in comparative inactivity as regards movements until perhaps the first of October, and that is the fact, that the season for a Summer campaign has passed. There has been much said and written about the endurance of Western troops. It has been demonstrated that they can endure as much in this climate as Southern or any other kind of troops. So I hold that there is a species of inhumanity involved in making August and September, the very worst months in the year, the time for active military operations, unless the strategic reasons therefore are very urgent. Because another feather could be added to the camel's load without breaking his back is no reason for adding the feather. Let us not hunt for the limit to the powers of our armies until the occasion imperatively demands it.

Furloughs are being granted freely—amounting to about five per cent. of the army. In my opinion this per centage could be increased without detriment to the service.

HEALTH OF THE TROOPS.

It is really wonderful that our men stand this climate as well as they do, but it is nevertheless true, that there is an amount of sickness in the army which is lamentable. Marching and trench life in Mississippi, during the midsummer months, are trying on the stoutest constitution. Chronic diarrhœa prevails to an alarming extent, and all the various forms of bilious and typhoid fever are rife here. I have seen in some Northern papers a statement that there had been cases of yellow fever in Vicksburg. This is not true. But Yellow Jack will probably visit us with his scourge if we do not clean up the place soon. The town is now reeking with the filthy debris of the two armies.

Walking in through the railroad depot yesterday, I witnessed a sad sight. The train from Black river was just in, and was filled with soldiers emaciated and sallow-hued. One poor fellow, who did not seem to be as far gone as the others, thought that with a little assistance he could get from the car he was in to the platform. While attempting this he was attached by a congestive chill. He begged to be laid down where he was. The men laid him down in the dust and dirt, thinking he would be better in a moment. In less than five minutes he was dead. The men around him did not even know his name, nor the regiment to which he belonged. To breathe one's last lying in the dust of a much-traveled road, without even an acquaintance near, is seemingly worse than to meet death gallantly on the battle-field.

WEST OF THE MISSISSIPPI.

On the Louisiana side of the river, in the country opposite Vicksburg, Kirby Smith has saved Gen. Grant all further trouble about looking after guerrillas, for a time at least. He has literally destroyed everything for thirty or forty miles back from the river, and driven the inhabitants, including the negroes, within his lines. Consequently Louisiana, opposite Vicksburg, is now a waste and howling wilderness that will not subsist guerrillas. What this poor people will do for the necessaries of life it is hard to say. Surely they are paying the penalty of treason at such a rate as to bring them to their senses soon.

SUBJUGATION.

The former citizens of Vicksburg who have concluded to remain in the place have not followed the example of the citizens of other Southern towns—Memphis for example—in hastening to make equivocal declarations of Union sentiments. They say unreservedly that they are subjugated—that their hopes of establishing an independent Government have been blasted, and all they now want is to make the best terms they can with their conquerors. I may be deceived by appearances, but I think I can see, day by day, through which these people have gone has purified them to a certain extent. They do not exhibit a tithe of the rancorous hate towards our officers and soldiers which has been manifested elsewhere. Having experienced the miseries of a siege, they find a measure of relief in the subjugation which has followed, all their former declamations as to the impossibility of such a thing to the contrary notwithstanding. Nor are the citizens of Vicksburg alone in their acknowledgments on this score. I have it on the highest authority that many of the leading planters of Mississippi—men who have heretofore been very lords of the lash—have come to Gen. Grant with a proposition to hire their slaves from the Government, rent their own farms, and resume planting. They profess a willingness to submit without reservation.

The Spy Service---Lee's Escape.

A correspondent of the New York Tribune, who had been criticised for some remarks in regard to the inefficiency of the spy service, thus chastens and vindicates his first statements:

A letter-writer in a New York paper takes exception at remarks made by me in regard to the low prices paid to spies and scouts by the secret service bureau of the army. He enlarges on the extreme officiousness of this bureau, and states that as much as $5,000 has been paid for a single item. Nobody doubts but that the Deputy Provost Marshal, who has charge of the service, is possessed of scouts; but the fact exists that Lee escaped us, and that good spies would have ascertained from infallible indications, on the afternoon before his passage of the Potomac, that his army was to cross during the night. Much of his artillery was doubtless then sent, as also the forage and mess wagons. Speedy information could have been given, a march during the night made, and an attack ensued at daylight upon his rear, which was not entirely across until 9 in the morning.

There are many ready witted men, heedless of danger, who would have undertaken to give timely and trustworthy information, if a proper sum had been offered, and have taken peculiar pleasure in the excitement and credit of the enterprise. Sufficient pains have not been taken to find such men. Five thousand dollars is lauded as a magnificent sum for a service of great risk. If $50,000 had been divided among three successful men on the above duty, it would have been cheap to the Government.

Lee's escape was doubtless, however, providential. Providence does not, perhaps, intend this war to close until all the rebel States have been practically freed from slavery by the forced of our armies. The two Carolinas, Georgia, and South-western Virginia, are yet, to a great extent, intact, and the peculiar institution flourishes there as of old. Upon proposals of peace, political rogues might endeavor to render void the President's Proclamation in regard to localities where slavery still exists. By practically demonstrating it, all chance of success with such efforts will be destroyed.

A CORRESPONDENT of the St. Louis Republican gives the names of no less than thirty-four steamers which have been destroyed on the Yazoo river and its tributaries, by the rebels, during the last few months, to prevent their falling into our hands. Most of them had been converted into gunboats. Among them was the former Star of the West. She was used by the Confederates as a transport, and was sunk in the Tallahatchee river, near Fort Pemberton, to obstruct the channel during the Yazoo Pass expedition.

THE Republican State Committee of Massachusetts met in Boston on Friday, and voted to issue a call inviting "the Republicans of Massachusetts, and all others who stand by the Government in crushing a thoroughly wicked rebellion, which has for its aim and object the overthrow of Republican institutions, and the extension and perpetuation of human slavery," to meet in convention at Worcester, on Thursday, the 24th day of September next, to nominate candidates for State officers, &c.

JOHN MERRYMAN, of Baltimore county, Md., who took a leading part in the violent opposition mails by Secession sympathizers in Maryland to the passage of the national troops from the East to Washington City, just after the war commenced, has been presented by the Grand Jury of the United States District Court in Baltimore for treason. He gave bail on Friday, July 31, in the sum of $40,000 to answer the charge at the next November term of the court.

THE commutation money paid by those drafted will amount, it is supposed, to some forty or fifty millions of dollars throughout the country. The United States Collector at Lancaster, Pa., has received $79,000, and exempted two hundred and sixty-five men in consequence.
