The Late Copperhead Convention and its Candidates.

We have scarcely referred to the doings of this august body, except to suggest that it had, by a singular accident, selected both its candidate, from the Bench of the Supreme Court. It could not have found a place perhaps where there was less virtue, or more devotion to party. It had proved its men already, by the disfranchisement of the soldier. It knew that there was other work for them still, and the product of its labor was a brace of Copperheads, of the most malignant and venemous type, drawn from that repertory of genius. But who and what are they?

The first is WOODWARD, who appeared above the horizon about the period of the Reform Convention of 1837, as a Free Trade theorist of the Calhoun School, and an advocate of a twenty-one years' residence for the foreigner, whose support he is now reckoning upon. For the former, POLK nominated him as a Judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, but the Senate couldn't see his merits, and accordingly rejected him. The Democracy took compassion on him, as hopeful politician in distress, and broke his fall by assigning him a place on the Bench of the Supreme Court of this State, where he has been since nursing his venom—speculating in stocks—and only coming out occasionally to sun himself, when there was opportunity for mischief.

The opening of the rebellion was such a one, and he did not fail to improve it. His speech, at the meeting in Independence Square, just after the secession of South Carolina, when he threw off his judicial robes, and appeared on the stand with an elaborately written argument, was one that disgraced his ermine, and ought to have unfrocked him as a judge, even if his previous conduct in the Allegheny Bond cases had not disclosed his utter unworthiness for such a position. It was a studied apology for the rebellion—a regular vilification of the North, and a correspondent glorification of the South. If he has ever changed his mind, or taken back a syllable of what he uttered there, we are not aware of it. That he has not, is proved by his nomination for Governor, and the request that he will continue to hold his place on the bench, unless that request is to be taken as evidence that they had no expectation of electing him.

And this want of confidence seems to be equally proved by the re-nomination of the pedant, and egotist, and apostate Whig, who has been playing at the office of Chief Justice for the last few years and helping, almost as largely as WOODWARD himself, to bring that Court into its present disrepute. It is scarcely to be believed that if there had been any hopes of success, there should have been nobody even to contest the nomination, with a candidate so universally unpopular with the profession and the people. He has done, however, what he could to deserve it, by deciding that the soldier shall not vote—by his charge to a Chester County Jury, and by appearing on the stand at the copperhead meetings in Philadelphia, and contributing with his pen to copperhead newspapers.

Both he and WOODWARD will, however, suit us admirably as candidates, in this region of the State, with the record they have made in the treatment of the Bond cases here, and their arbitrary dealings with the Councils of our city, and the Commissioners of this and other western counties. The friends of the Union and the war have occasion to rejoice that they have been singled out as the victims, in the impending struggle at the ballot-box. It would have been impossible for the rebel sympathizers to have selected two worse or weaker men. If they are not beaten, it will not be the fault of the Harrisburg Convention.

Judge Woodward and a Frank Old Landlord.

In one of the northern counties of this State, where trout fishing delights the sportsman, is a country tavern known as the "Rough and Ready," and the proprietor of it is well represented by his sign. Some miles distant resides a legal gentleman who is on very friendly terms with the innkeeper; and, last summer, this individual drove up to the inn, accompanied by another gentleman, when old Boniface came out to bid them welcome. The lawyer, with a manner that was intended to impress the landlord with the dignity of the stranger visitor, said to him:

"Well, ——, we have come to spend a few days with you and enjoy fishing; this is Judge Woodward." The landlord's brow lowered; he scanned the Judge for a moment, and then inquired: "Is this the Judge who decided that our brave soldiers have no right to vote?" "He gave a constitutional decision on the question," said the lawyer. "He can't stay in my house; I want nothing to do with anybody who is opposed to soldiers voting; you can drive on," said old Rough and Ready," and he turned his back on his visitors with a dignity and contempt that would have become a Cæsar; and the lawyer and Judge Woodward had to seek other quarters.

PETROLEUM IN MASSACHUSETTS.—Prof. Abner Morse, of this city, writes from Sweetzy to the N. E. Historic-Genealogical Society that, in searching with success for more traces of the ancient Northmen, he has ascertained the existence of Petroleum in Bristol county in such prospective quantities that there are shall have furnished a cheap method of refining it. Taunton and other places may likewise thank their stars and work without drawing from the oleaginous oil wells of Pennsylvania.—Boston Traveller.

From Savannah--Alarm about Rosecrans' Movements---Currency---Prices--Stories of Refugees, etc.

We published yesterday in our dispatches, some interesting items from the Port Royal New South, which had received its intelligence from Savannah newspapers and deserters. We have since had the New South by mail, and add the following interesting excerpts:

A letter from Nootora, Georgia, reports as a certain fact that Rosecrans is now making a flank movement on Bragg's army, by the way of Rome, with a force variously estimated from sixteen thousand upwards.

Flour is $32 per barrel in Savannah, and wormy at that.

In an editorial on the depreciation of the rebel currency, the Savannah Telegraph says: "The currency is getting some hard knocks in these times. It has not only to stand such practical jokes as swapping off eleven dollars for one of Lincoln's gold dollars at public auction, by parties who intend to run the blockade and join the enemy, but it is deliberately blackguarded by dealers in fancy rags and gewgaws: Vat you say high for? Your munish is so good as nothing at all. It ish wort no more ash five sphents ter toller, your tollers for ter calico ish twenty shents—no more—no less. Vat you say high for?' Ah, the Lord help us. If Congress, at the outset of this war, had done as the press desired it to, it would have made its obligations at this day as good as gold, wielded a tremendous lever, financial and political.

The following is a correct list of rebel prices at Atlanta, Georgia, on the 6th inst: Printing paper, $3 per pound; chickens, $3 per pair; flour, $35 per 100 pounds; bacon, $1 50 per pound; beef, $1 per pound; butter, $1 75 per pound; eggs, $1 per dozen; cabbage, $1 a piece; potatoes, $12 per bushel; calico, $3 per yard; shoes, $40 a pair; boots, $70 a pair.

STORIES OF REFUGEES.

From the Port Pulaski correspondence of the New South (Port Royal) dated Aug. 10, we select the following:

About six o'clock in the morning the sentinel announced a small boat coming down the Savannah river, which had been followed as far as the obstruction by a rebel steamer. Knowing that it must contain deserters, it was unmolested, and standing upon our water battery, we soon descried upon the approaching boat that it contained six contrabands and an indefinite number of bundles. It was a comical sight to see these poor creatures, three women and three men, so rejoiced that they had at least reached a "free breff," and all their doubts of a favorable reception were dispelled, when the officer of the day told them to land upon being assured by one of their number, "dis der anybody her favorbul to we?"

They had left Savannah the night before in an old United States launch, and succeeded in evading the rebel picket boats in the Savannah river. After they had passed the obstructions, they escorted themselves in a marsh near by for the night, and at daylight again started upon their voyage. It was at this time that the aforesaid rebel steamer discovered them and gave chase, but the contrabands pulled for life and gained it.

THEIR HISTORY.

The recent history of this crew in brief is as follows: One of the men, a bright looking mulatto, was cook on board the ram Savannah, and had meditated his escape for some time. The other men were workmen in the boat yard of Fred. Willing, who is now building a ram for the rebels. Of the women two have husbands within our lines. All of the women were to be sold to-day in Savannah, at public auction. Their mistresses told them that they intended to contribute the purchase money to the Confederate cause. Their escape, however, has materially diminished the rebel exchequer.

After they had been landed, and the bundles containing the wearing apparel removed, they were escorted to the guard house, and subsequently examined by Major Ames commandant of the fort in reference to Savannah and its defences.

A GOOD REASON FOR LEAVING.

One of them, a man of some fifty years, upon being asked why he had come down to us, replied: "You see, boss, Ise bin laborin' for forty years and I aint got nuffin to show fur it. I just thought I'd cum down and breave free." This old fellow has until recently, been following the rebel army in Virginia as officers' cook. He spoke of the Peninsula campaign and very feelingly referred to a "big gold watch," which he took from one of our officers during the seven days' fight, and he now wears a private's coat of ours, which he picked up upon that field. A remark was made to him that he must have cut a swell in Savannah, when he arrayed himself in his gold watch and good clothes. Rolling up his eyes, grinning, and at the same time looking at his present rig, he informed us as follows: "O yes; dis is not my good close. You ought to see'd me den when I was dressed and had on my old two-story, den I was fine." He was asked how he came to run away. "Well," said he, "I come home Satday night and I tell de ole woman to pack up, Ise gwine to trabbel. She pack up and we is here."

DEFENCES OF SAVANNAH.

There are but two thousand troops in and around the city, and although the authorities have no troops to man them, still they are erecting additional fortifications bearing on the Savannah river. The utmost alarm prevails, fearing at any moment they do; an advance by us. The blockade runner Everglade is lying off Thunderbolt battery in the Wilmington river, waiting for an opportunity to run the blockade of Warsaw Sound. A portion of the heavy guns on the fortifications have been dismounted and sent to Charleston. The people of Savannah think that Charleston will fall into our hands and that we will then attack Savannah."

ANOTHER CONTRABAND.

The examination of these contrabands had but just been concluded when the sentinel reported that he saw a man waving a handkerchief over on Wilmington Island or rather marsh. A boat was immediately sent up the creek, and returned with a contraband who also had brought his baggage.

HIS STORY

was as follows: He was owned by a hardware dealer in Macon, Ga., and had been sent to Savannah to work upon the fortifications. He arrived at Savannah on last Thursday, and not liking that kind of work, he packed up his wardrobe and left for Fort Pulaski. By the aid of a friendly slave he was put upon Wilmington Island Friday night, and started through the marsh on his perilous and tedious journey.

THE DEFENCES OF MACON.

He reports a thousand home guards at Macon, and the city stripped of all able-bodied males, and business suspended almost entirely.

IMPORTANCE IS TRUE.

This contraband is a mulatto of some twenty years, and very intelligent. He detailed many conversations which he had overheard between his master and the first men of the city. He said they used to get together in the counting room and say that "it was no use to fight the North any longer. The South would surely be whipped in the end, and the best thing that could be done would be to fix up the old Union," I asked him if these men talked this on the public street. He replied, "No, sir; these very men would go out in the street and talk wild about whipping the Yankees, the South never giving up, and a lot of other trash."

This contraband also informed me that nearly every lady in Macon was dressed in mourning, and that the blockade runners sold more of that class of goods than anything else. The slaves are becoming very restless, and if they only knew how to make a successful escape they would come into our lines by droves. And again their masters tell them the most fearful stories of our cruelties to the blacks, so that the more ignorant know not whether it be better to endure the ills they have, than fly to those they know not of.

These contrabands all substantiated each other's testimony, being examined separately, and it can but be concluded that the rebels are indeed hard up, not only for provisions and clothing, but for troops and munitions of war. One of them reported that he overheard an officer say that General Lee had resigned on account of a quarrel between him and Jeff. Davis. This, if true, is but another evidence that the superstructure of the Confederacy is crumbling, like the "baseless fabric of a vision."

Hon. Winter Davis on Negro Soldiers

Let Northern Copperheads, who rail against the President for employing negro soldiers in the service of the Union, ponder the words uttered by the Hon. Winter Davis, of Baltimore, at a Union meeting in Portland. He says:

The President had an undoubted right, under the act of Congress, to employ as many negroes as can be obtained in putting down the rebellion. He would like to see the question of slavery mooted. That act of Congress has placed in the hands of the President the instrument that shall free the negro, who, bearing the same stars and stripes, will defend the constitution as as it is, if not seek to secure the Union as it was.

He said if the people of Maine were not sufficiently warmed up, let them take the roasting they in Maryland have taken, and they would get warmed up. They don't stop to ask a man who is willing to fight for the Union, whether he is black or white, bond or free. We will fight side by side with any body who will aid us in putting down this rebellion, and those who were not willing to do it had better stay at home. General Jackson addressed the colored soldiers as fellow citizens, and urged them to fight for their country. The question of equality need not now be settled. If they are our equals we can't help it, and if they are not we should regret it, as it is not their fault, and they are entitled to our sympathy.

The Constitution of the United States knows no difference except in a provision made for Indians. Colored men in Maine, New Hampshire, and in many other States, have all the rights and privileges of a white man. They voted in Maryland and North Carolina at one time. John Bell said he was twice elected to Congress by negro votes. It is entirely a new idea that they are not citizens, originating with Judge Taney in his decision in the Dred Scott case. They are a great instrument of power, having mental and physical ability combined with a strong motive to fight for the Union as it ought to be. It is no time to quibble about these matters of etiquette while the life-blood of our nation is being sought. The rebels having abdicated their country without a just cause, they must abide the consequences.

Molley Hosts in the Far West.

On the banks of the Arkansas river, ere this time, a battle has probably taken place, between five thousand Unionists, under Gen. Blunt, and ten or eleven thousand rebels, under Gens. Steele, Cooper, Cabill and others. Gen. Blunt was, at last accounts, about 180 miles north of Fort Scott, preparing for the battle. The Kansas correspondent of the New York Times gives an interesting account of the motley hosts of men of all colors who compose the two armies. Among them are whites, half-breeds, Indians and negroes. Gen. Blunt has a white Kansas regiment, three Indian and half-breed regiments, a colored Kansas regiment, an Indian regiment from Colorado, together with some artillery and cavalry from Wisconsin and Kansas. The Union Indian regiments are mainly composed of Cherokee and Creeks, the former of whom have suffered terribly at the hands of the rebels for their loyalty, their towns, villages and plantations having been desolated by them. Among the privates in the Cherokee regiments are civilized aborigines, who once owned many slaves and thousands of cattle. Among the rebel forces are several regiments of Cherokees and Choctaws, with a few Creeks, and some of their Indian commanders are acting Brigadier Generals. The rest of the rebel troops are mainly Texans. Gen. Steele, the most prominent rebel commander, is a renegade New Yorker, formerly of the United States regular army, he having been a Captain in the Third Cavalry previous to the outbreak of the rebellion. Gen. Blunt has reason to believe that the rebel Creeks will not fight against him, but we presume he thinks his force sufficient whether they desert the Confederate standard or not. Should Blunt be victorious in the Indian Territory, he will soon make his appearance in Northern Texas.

The progress of the war has brought to many exciting and novel combinations, and has puzzled the shrewdest prognosticators; but we think that nothing more odd has yet turned up than this motley assemblage of opposing hosts of varying races away out in the Far West.

CONGRESSIONAL NOMINATIONS IN MARYLAND.—The Baltimore Sun says there is a convention of anti-slavery Union men called in the First District of Maryland, for the purpose of placing in nomination a candidate to represent their views as against those of Mr. Crisfield, the present slaveholding member, who has been nominated for re-election.

SEMPLE CLAY
St LOUIS, MO.

Having accepted the Agency for the sale of the SEMPLE CLAY, mined near St. Louis, Mo., I invite the attention of Glass and Steel Manufacturers to the Analysis given above, as reported by Profs. A. A. Hays, of Boston, and J. G. Booth, of Philadelphia, which, together with the test of actual experience by manufacturers in Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis, determines it to be the purest and most valuable Clay now known, whether Foreign or American. Pots made from it have stood in the Glass Furnace from 6½ to 9 months.

The Analysis is of the Clay as taken from the mine, without any washing or preparation whatever. It possesses great adhesiveness and plasticity qualities, which are not shown by the Analysis, and which admit of the admixture of a large proportion of sand or burned clay.

I am now prepared to fill orders for the above Clay, to be shipped from St. Louis or delivered here.
