The impressment of all males between the ages of fifteen and sixty is in progress, with unrelating severity, throughout Eastern Virginia within the rebel lines. The number of men thus raiced does not equal the number of desertions from the rebel ranks. The country is not only cleared of men, but all kinds of forage and provisions are saised. Refugees say that language cannot convey an idea of the destitution and distress which plavails.

A lotter from an officer high in command of the Cumberland says: The whole country is between Chattanega and Mississippi is filled with deserters from Bragg's and Johnson's armies. The disaffection exists mostly among the Louisians, Mississippi and Tennessee regulations, who say they have nothing more to fight for.
