The Lawrence Tragedy.

Quantrel, the butcher of Kansas citizens, is an Ohioan by birth, went to Kansas as a school-teacher, and turns up the leader of banditti, whose deeds of ferocity and blood will live imperishable in fiends' annals. The history of his exploits earlier in the war was one of discomfiture and disaster. It was reserved for the rule of Copperhead military commanders in Missouri to give him facilities and exemptions never before enjoyed. Schofield and Ewing were the authors of the Lawrence tragedy, and when their crime goes up against them at Washington, it can but be that their punishment will follow.

The Southern Press on the Situation.

The Richmond papers continue to pitch into England; the reason she does not recognize the South is because her people have large investments in the North; but then the North will be hopelessly bankrupt at the close of the war, and England will lose her money after all.

The Richmond Whig wants Davis to send word to Seymour that he is willing to talk over re-union; the Copperheads will control an armistice, and then the South can talk as long as they please; meantime the Alliance with France can be made, by granting privileges, and then the North, Copperheads and all, may go to the devil. The same paper raves as usual about the impossibility of subjugation, and the still greater impossibility of submission—basing the latter upon the fidelity of Southern hearts to Yankees. "John Mitchel, the renegade Irishman, editor of The Examiner, is "firing the Southern heart" in his exaggerated style, cranking his pen over the heads of Rebels much as if they were "fat niggers" to be fatted. One of the papers, in speaking of the Day of Fasting and Prayer, says the people cannot be surprised that the Confederacy is in trouble—they have been too wicked, and "unless ye repent ye cannot be saved." A little less money making and a considerable more prayer are respectfully looked for. As a specimen of "Yankee villainy," a Florida paper says that the Unionists entered the harbor of New Smyrna, and actually "destroyed a number of vessels that were preparing to run the blockade."

The Army of the Potomac—No Forward Movement Probable.

A letter from the army to the Boston Traveller says:

"There is no prospect of a general engagement between Meade and Lee, and in fact officials high in position say that orders have been issued from the War Department instructing Meade to avoid bringing on a general engagement with the enemy. The reasons assigned for this order are, the present weakness of our army, owing to the withdrawal of large forces for New York and reinforcements for Gillmore. By waiting two weeks the draft will be finished in New York, the fall of Charleston will probably have taken place, when we can recall those large bodies of troops temporarily withdrawn, and, with the augmented strength of the conscripts which will arrive during that time, our army will be strong enough to cope with Lee's minions again.

"Our army has fallen back slightly within the last six days, and it is currently reported that the sole object of Gen. Meade, at present, is to protect Washington, and should Lee venture an attack he will leave to assault on behind our formidable fortifications. There is a great deal said in military circles about Lee again invading Maryland, but of course these opinions are based upon mere conjecture or hearsay. The designs of Lee are not known even at headquarters, but his manoeuvres are surmised by our right hand Commander-in-Chief, who is ready to checkmate the impatient foe at any moment."

The Work Done by 200-Pounders.

The Providence Journal, of Monday, says: We are permitted to make the following interesting extract from a private letter of Captain A. W. Colwell, of Pawtucket, 2d R. I. H. A. Under date of the 25th of August the Captain says:

"I went to my battery at four o'clock this morning, and as soon as it was light, I began firing at fatigue practice on Sumter, Gregg, Johnson and other rebel works. It was fun to see the skedaddling! Their work has not amounted to much to-day. This morning I put one of my 200 pound shots into and through a steamer (about the size of the Newport steamers) two miles and a half off. That is what we call fine shooting.

"At 8 o'clock this afternoon the Chief of Artillery came to me and ordered me to fire into Sumter, and I put seven shots into her—some of them looked as if they had opened a barn door there. I think we shall begin with all of our batteries in a few days. In the meantime, I have orders to fire at all squads of rebels I can see. Our mortars are firing to-night to keep the rebels from repairing the works."

He continues on the following day, Aug. 18th: "My company have named all of my guns—No. 1, Baby Wake; No. 2, Whirling Dick; No. 3, Brick Driver; No. 4, Crasher. I forgot to say that in my firing yesterday morning, I knocked one of the guns from the top of Sumter over the parapet, into the water. It was a chance shot."

Matters at Natchez, Miss.—The Rebels Trying to Cross the Mississippi.

A letter from Natchez, Miss., to the St. Louis Republican, says:

"General Ransom is still in command here. The rebel General Logan has about twelve hundred cavalry some twenty miles east of us, with which he hangs around and tries to cut off stragglers and foraging parties. General Ransom and General Lee are co-operating now to get in and save for Uncle Sam a large quantity of cotton marked 'C. S. A.' which has been discovered just this of Logan's plots. Logan wishes to burn it, but is afraid he will merely burn his own fingers. It is likely that several thousand bales will be secured for us.

"The rebels still attempt to cross the Mississippi in flatboats and skiffs. It is said that Wirt Adams with a battalion of cavalry succeeded in getting over from the west side to Rodney in this way, some eight miles. His men were in small boats and the horses swam. Joe Johnson's troops are still near Meridian, but it is likely that the Alabama or Tombigbee river will be his line."

In was the area of fifteen square miles, in which New York City is moulded, that by its vote overcame the vote of the entire State for Wadsworth and elected Seymour. It is a very significant fact that, nowhere else in the entire Union, save within this area of fifteen square miles, has there been any organized or serious resistance to the conscription law.

Alice B. Haven (formerly Alice B. Neal) died yesterday at her residence in Mamaroneck, Westchester county, at the age of thirty-five years. Her maiden name was Emily Bradley, and while a school girl she sent, under the pseudonyme of Alice G. Lee, many attractive sketches to the Saturday Visitor, then recently established by Joseph C. Neal, in Philadelphia. She was married to Mr. Neal in 1846, and at his request assumed and has since retained the name of Alice. On the death of her husband, in 1847, she took the editorial charge of the Casket, and conducted it for several years, contributing at the same time poetry and sketches to the leading magazines. She published a volume in 1850 entitled the Sweethopes of Riverdown, with Sketches in Prose and Verse," and is more generally known by her series of juvenile stories, as "Helen Morton," "Pictures from the Bible," "No such Word as Fail," "Parlaugh Waldo," "No Loss," "Contentment Better than Wealth," "All's not Gold that Glitters," "Out of Debt Out of Danger," "The Cooper," and others. In 1853 she was married to Mr. Bethel B. Haven, and has since resided in Westchester county.

Among thirty negroes have reported at the Draft Rendezvous in New Haven as the result of the draft. On Saturday Gen. Hunt sent about twenty. Five of them down to Providence, R. I., to join a light battery in progress there. The negro conscripts, according to the Journal, have been among the most orderly and faithful men at the rendezvous, and their conduct deserves to be mentioned to their credit.

The Lowell (Mass.) Advertiser states that a private letter received in that city from New Orleans, dated August 13th, says: "There is to be a change in the department. General Banks is to command three army corps, and each corps is to have a major-general—Gen. Franklin, commanding the 19th, General Andrews the corps de Afrique, and the 3d corps is on the Rio Grande."

Cavalry.—The Cavalry Bureau at Washington is remounting the cavalry at the rate of fourthousand a day. The regular brigade has been entirely remounted. Stahl has contracting at Young's Point to hold twelve thousand horses, and the animals worn down or sickened in the field will be sent in on a regular system to be nursed and rested into health.

Gen. Frank Blair is in Washington on a visit to his father. His conversational sketches of United States Grant, and of eulogy of his military and personal qualities, greatly contribute the popular impression that the soldier of the West is the greatest specimen of the war.

WILLIAM A. WARD, DENTIST, Eichbaum's Building, 61 Fifth street, entrance on Liberty street. Office hours from 8 a.m. till 5 p.m. Is also now prepared, under Anæsthesia (in the best manner known to the profession), to extract Teeth without pain.
