A Warning to Deserters.

We are glad to see that General Meade has approved the sentence of the Court Martial; in the cases of some four deserting substitutes, who were condemned to be shot, and declared his determination to put a stop to what has already become an enormous evil, by strictly inflicting the extremest penalties of the law in all such cases. This is the true humanity, as it is indeed the only policy that will enable the Government to recruit its shattered armies. It seems to have been to general an understanding amongst those who have hired themselves as substitutes, that they would take the first favorable opportunity to decamp, that an army correspondent of one of our newspapers here, speaks of it as a thing about which there was no concealment. A few examples, like those of the men now doomed, and others who have been lately shot in the act of escaping from their guards, will teach these fellows that it is much better to take the mere risk of dying honorably on the battle-field, with many chances of coming out unharmed, than the certainty of an ignominious death at the hands of a file of their fellow-soldiers, with a dozen muskets aimed at their hearts at the distance of ten paces. We hope they will not overlook the warning.

Picket-Firing—Reported Narrow Escape of Gen. Rosecrans.

A letter from Rosecrans' army says:

All along there has been a sort of tacit understanding between our pickets at Bridgeport, and those of the enemy on the other opposite, that neither would fire upon the other. But while a considerable number of our soldiers were bathing in the river near Bridgeport, the rebels shouted across that the Yankees were getting a little too d—d numerous over there," and that they intended to observe the truce no longer. Suiting their action to their words, they forthwith opened fire, produced a prodigious "scattering" amongst the bathers, and sent shells deep into a tree, very near which Gen. Rosecrans was standing.

There are no rebels in this section who have either the power or the inclination to do us much harm. A couple of miserable bush whackers, a night or two since, fired upon Gen. Negley's pickets, but injured no one. I have heard of no other demonstration of the kind.

We mentioned the fact a day or two ago that John Brodhead, the author of that short but inexpressively abject letter to Jeff. Davis, asking Davis to help him to a place in Nicaragua, a country he was anxious "to open to civilization and niggers," and at the same time saying he was tired of being a white slave at the North, and longed for a home in the sunny South—that this mean-spirited wretch, John Brodhead, was a candidate before the Democratic City Convention for City Treasurer. We see now, by the Philadelphia papers, that John did not seek honors at the hands of the party in vain—he is announced as their regularly nominated candidate for the office he desired. He is a fit standard-bearer for Woodward Copperheads.

THREE MORE PIRATES.—PERHAPS.—A suspicious sale of three British steam vessels of war lately took place at Plymouth, and it was supposed that they were intended for the Confederate Government. The London Morning Star says:

A Plymouth paper, whose statement we quote, calls attention to a rather suspicious sale of three of Her Majesty's steam vessels-of-war out of the navy at that port. Two of these vessels, the Heela and Merlin, which have been christened the Typhon and Sea Hawk, are said to belong to a London Company, and were advertised for a pleasure trip to the Mediterranean. But that has fallen through, and circumstances justify a suspicion that they are intended for the Confederate Government.

THE Washington Chronicle says that for the past two years the British Patent Office has been engaged in producing pictures and preparing biographies of its most eminent inventors; and a few weeks ago Mr. Holloway, on behalf of our Patent Office, was the recipient of nine portraits of the most celebrated inventors of cotton machinery, namely: John Kay, inventor of the fly shuttle; Richard Arkwright, inventor of improvements in machinery for spinning; Samuel Crompton, inventor of the mule; Edmund Cartwright, inventor of the power loom; Joseph Marie Jacquard, inventor of Jacquard loom for weaving; Wm. Radcliffe, inventor of the dressing machine; Richard Roberts, inventor of the self-acting mule; Joshua Heilmann, inventor of a combing machine, and Lewis Paulhjan, inventor of machine spinning.

JEFF. DAVIS' CORRESPONDENCE GOES TO WASHINGTON.—We are glad to learn, says the Cincinnati Gazette, that the Government has secured the bulk of the correspondence of Jeff. Davis, captured recently at his plantation. The Vincennes (Ind.) Gazette says the mail car from the West, on Monday last, brought the private papers of Jeff. Davis, recently captured by our forces at his farm in Mississippi. They were en route for Washington City. Much treasonable correspondence of the Democratic leaders will no doubt come to light.

POST-MORTEM RESOLUTIONS.—Our dispatches mentioned a day or two ago that Gen. Pemberton died last week at Selma, Alabama. We have since seen it stated that he was shot by a Texan officer. The rebel Gen. Holmes is also dead. It is curious that the Senate of Alabama but a few days ago passed resolutions of want of confidence in both these Generals. Holmes had been dead a fortnight, however, before the sapient Senators lost confidence in him.

The Army and Navy Gazette that came by the last English mail, Mr. Russell gives a luminous and accurate roll of the splendid military and naval victories recently gained by the Union arms; and after doing so, he comes to the philosophical, metaphysical, historical and creditable conclusion that "its recital is philosophy, metaphysics, historical perusal of a combing machine, and Lewis Paulhjan-vention of machine spinning.

The Southern Confederacy Abroad--Opinion of French Statesmen on Probabilities of an American War--Mr. Evart's Assurance in London and Paris on the President's Intentions.

A letter from Washington to the N. Y. Tribune contains some interesting statements of the altered aspect of American affairs in Europe:

All the official or semi-official advices received by the last European mail agree in stating that for the present at least the South has very little hope from the English or French Government. Its best friends, such as Lord Palmerston and Louis Napoleon, both as Lord Palmerston and Louis Napoleon, both as have openly announced that in its present condition, with half of its provinces lost, or threatened by the Federals—with its resources impaired, and likely to become more so as the war and land expeditions in preparation or in progress in the North will unfold themselves—the Southern Confederacy can set no claims to recognition. Its autonomy, such as it was at the time the Montgomery Constitution was assented to by eleven seceded States, and England and France acknowledged its right as belligerents, exists no more. It has been broken by a series of reverses which have placed part of the States constituting that autonomy in the hands of the North, so that is is doubtful to-day if it can ever be reconstructed.

It would, therefore, be idle to speculate now upon the probability of the recognition of the South, and the English and French Cabinets are now more advised as such a step than they ever were since the beginning of the war; and, unless some prospective political incentive intervenes, such as the fear France may entertain in its occupation of Mexico, which may prompt Louis Napoleon to establish in the New World a friendly Power which would act as a barrier against the ostensible hostility of the North toward its Government—you may rest assured that nothing will be done at present in favor of the South.

On that subject I may add that a great many persons deny that the existence of the Southern Confederacy is, or ever has been necessary to the protection of French interests in Mexico, or that France calculates upon that support for the undisturbed maintenance of her protectorate over that country. They say, in justification of their belief, that France has more than one string to her bow, and that, in view of any future action on the part of the Northern States against Mexico, the French Government has contrived a plan by means of which the acceptance of the throne by Prince Maximilian would be placed under the joint protectorate of France, England and Spain, Prince Maximilian assuming, in return for such a favor, the responsibility of the debt due to these three Powers, and giving guarantees for the payment of it. If such is the fact, and I have the best reason to believe that such a protectorate is now on the way of being established, the Mexican throne would indeed rest on very strong foundations.

I must say on the other hand that, as a general thing, French statesmen are very incredulous as regards the power of the North to take into account with an European nation either in the present or in the future. They say that whether we succeed in crushing the Rebellion and in bringing back the seceded States into the Union or not, we shall be so completely exhausted by the effort that we shall find ourselves perfectly unable to commence another war, especially with such a mighty Power as France. The do not hesitate to say that we shall have enough to do in keeping our conquered provinces under the yoke and to restore order, peace and the love of its Union among a susceptible and profoundly disaffected population, without encumbering ourselves with the burden of a foreign war, which would be the signal of fresh insurrection in the South.

If, on the contrary, the South succeeds in gaining its independence, then the North will have the greatest interest in having France for neighbor, the presence of that Power on the border of the Rio Grande being the most effective check against any attempt on the part of the South to extend Slavery in these regions.

It is asserted in high place that an assurance was given by Mr. Evarts to English and French statesmen that Mr. Lincoln's intention was not to stop this war unless the extinction of Slavery had been secured, and that it had the most favorable effect in London and Paris. This abolition programme is looked upon in these two cities as the best means to obtain the neutrality of European Powers in the American conflict.

The Genius of Rascality.

A shrewd trick was recently practiced in London. A dandy, dressed up in the most faultless style, called at a large jewelry store, and, after a short examination, bought a gold watch for £20, and he handed the rejoiced salesman a £100 note. He examined it carefully, and, finding it to be genuine, he gave him back the required change, £80. Just as he was stepping out of the store, he was met by another dandy, equally as well dressed, by whom he seemed to recognize. He exhibited his newly bought watch to his friend, and was very profuse in his praises about its size and finish. Both stepped back into the store, and a short perusal on the part of the first dandy induced the new comer to buy a similar watch for the same price. He also paid for his watch with a £100 (the English dandies do not trouble themselves with small change) and received his change, after the experienced dealer had satisfied himself that the note was genuine.

But just as the last dandy was in the act of pocketing the money and watch, both dandies appeared very much agitated; they looked into the street, stepped in with each other with laudable modesty, and fought for the door. But, to the dismay and discomfiture of both, a constable stepped out of the carriage, collared them both, and with a triumphant "I have got at last, you scoundrels," led them back into the store. Here he informs the dealer that these two gentlemen are two of the sharpest swindlers in London; (which was saying a good deal) and asked the jeweler what business he had with them. "These gentlemen have bought two gold watches for forty pounds, and paid for them in good money," said the now frightened dealer.

The constable laughed right out, and asked him if he had not been paid in hundred pound notes. The jeweler said he had a fearful light beginning to dawn upon him. The constable then demanded to see the notes. The copper-dellers were produced, and the constable informed the now thunder-stricken dealer that the notes were forged, and the culprits, overwhelmed with the weight of their guilt, silently acknowledged the deed. The vigilant officer, jubilant over the important catch, seizes watches, money and prisoners, and summoning the jeweler to attend the police bureau in an hour, puts the prisoners in a carriage and drives off on a gallop.

Just as the last sound of the carriage had died away in the distance, the jeweler recovered from his surprise. It now occurred to him that perhaps it would have been better if he had accompanied the expedition. Breathless, he dashed out, but the cab had vanished. He made inquiries at the police bureau, but no men were ever seen again. Deeply hurt at the immorality of the times, which even made the sacred uniforms of the police serve them in their nefarious schemes, the compeer of the great McDonald returned home a sadder but a wiser man.

A SPECIAL DISPATCH to the Louisville Journal, dated Stevenson, Ala., Aug. 23, states that from their look-outs on the mountains, our soldiers could plainly see the rolling steam of the railroad going off southward from Chattanooga. Large fires were plainly seen on the night of the 21st, in the rear of the town. All the forts are strongly guarded by infantry and artillery; rifle pits cover the hill-side in the vicinity of the fords, and the work of crossing our army seems likely to prove a bloody one. The enemy displayed a disposition to resist the passage of the river, but dexterity say that he is removing the greater portion of his troops, leaving small guards to annoy Gen. Rosecrans' army.

A DISPATCH received in Boston reports the following blockade runners at Bermuda on the 4th inst.: British steamers Gibraltar, Bagdad, Harriet Pinckney, Mail, Ella, Gladiator, Spaulding and Jane; also the rebel steamers Lady Davis, E
