REBELS AND COPPERHEADS

Rebel intrigues with Northern sympathizers—A Treasonable Conspiracy—Chain of Historical Evidence.

The following communication recently appeared in the Cincinnati Gazette, and so great is the importance of the facts stated, and the irrefragable conclusion that follows in every reasonable and candid mind after considering the array of them as presented in the more order of succession, that it justly claims a wide publicity at the present time, in order to confound the traitorous schemes of rebel and copperhead conspirators, who are no less assiduous in the fall of 1863 in every work of disloyalty, than they were in the fall of 1862.

About the 20th day of September, 1862, the rebel General Bragg issued an address from Camp Dick Robinson to the citizens of Kentucky and the Northwest, urging them to rally to his standard and free themselves from the Lincoln tyranny.

General Pope's army had been thoroughly routed at Washington, and it is reported that the rebels would be able, by a vigorous dash, to take and hold it. To the courageous men the Federal cause looked gloomy enough, while to the timid and those who were wavering between duty and disloyalty, it looked desperate.

The latter class the circular of General Bragg was especially and certainly had its effect for the moment that the Kentucky Legislature assembled at the capital in January, 1863, the chairman of the Senate, the Federal Relations introduced a series of resolutions denouncing the action and policy of the Federal Government in Kentucky.

The facts relied upon, the arguments and masses of bringing about the result which they desired, were singularly cogent to those used by the champions of the scheme in the Kentucky Legislature. Hervey, Wolf & Co. having failed in their project in the House of Representatives, and finding that their object was fully understood, although actually concealed under a string of metaphysical propositions, shortly afterwards pulled the strings and declared themselves to be for no more men and no more money to aid the United States in overthrowing the rebellion.

ing the State of Kentucky and the North-western States from the United States; that the political instrument through which these States are people were to be authoritatively bound to meet at Louisville, under the auspices of the Kentucky Legislature.

The Legislature of Illinois and Indiana were filled with men in the interest of these schemes, who were the most violent and illegal methods to prevent the loyal executive officers of those States from fulfilling their duty to the nation.

Subsequent to the foregoing are another class of facts leading to the same conclusion. Your correspondent of the Army of the Cumberland says, that in conversation with members of the most distinguished of the Southern States, together with many captured rebel officers, that there was an arrangement between Yell and others in the Northwestern States, that the rebels should invade the North, and that when they appeared in sufficient force to protect their allies, the copperheads were to rally to their assistance.

The Convention delegates and Richmond newspaper had their statements soon after verified to the latter. Following his arrival at the Clinton Hotel, he followed California and Maine. Our people are thoroughly aroused, and our speakers fully at work. Indiana and Ohio to be followed by other States, took place also. All this while the banished Democratic candidate for Governor, who had occasion to know something of Western Pennsylvania also, and it is a fair indication of the State, Curtin is certain of reelection.

The number of prize vessels taken into the port of Philadelphia since the commencement of the war is eighty-five. The most valuable, including the cargo, is valued at more than a million of dollars. Several of the late prizes which brought heavy cargoes of cotton realized large sums.

How a Neutral should Act. If the British Government still adhered to international law in allowing armed vessels to leave her ports to cruise against the commerce of this country, it will not be for want of light and knowledge.

These few simple lines are worth whole volumes of discussion, as they embrace both the law and the obligations of the British Government in this matter, point out the direct road to duty, which has hitherto evaded by requiring from our Government a course of conduct which is in a protest against acts which are as much an offense against British law as they are against the laws of the United States.

A letter from New York, referring to the concentration of Russian war-ships in that harbor, says: I think it is safe to say, from a conversation I have just had with one of the most intelligent officers on board the flagship of the squadron, that the British Government is not at all disposed to make any secret treaty with the United States, but that they are anxious to have just this. The case, not wishing to have eight or ten of his fleet members in the harbor, he is anxious to have the embayments of the Baltic preferred to have them winter in the friendly ports of North America or keep them in the Black Sea.

Coming Events.—The New York Tribune gives the following extract of a private letter, dated Cleveland, Oct. 3rd, September 16th, 1863: The number of prize vessels taken into the port of Philadelphia since the commencement of the war is eighty-five.
