FROM various sources of information we derive very strong presumptive evidence, that a difference of opinion, and a controversy growing out of the same, have been prominent matters, for some time past, in the intercourses between the President and the military authorities at Washington and the General Commanding the Army of the Potomac. We may presume that neither side has had the advantage of any special means of intelligence from which the other was excluded; for it is but reasonable to suppose, that whatever information was gathered from spies or deserters at the headquarters of the army in the field, was immediately communicated to the War Department, and the General-in-Chief at Washington; and so of information received by the latter, that it was at once sent to General MEADE. The fact is, and must be, that from the same mass of evidence the parties in the case have drawn different conclusions.

Gen. MEADE seems to have been led to believe that the rebel General LEE was in his front in great force—so that it would be exceedingly imprudent to take the initiative, and either attack him in his position on the Rapidan, or by any other offensive movement to risk bringing on a general engagement. On the other hand, the military authorities at Washington had come to a conclusion directly opposite—and so decidedly so, that the President, in the fullest assurance that LEE's army would be found far inferior in numbers to MEADE'S, if MEADE would but test the question, that he wrote—"Attack LEE—now is your opportunity—the undivided glory of the victory shall be yours; but even if you fail—if defeat is possible—you shall not be held responsible—I consent to bear the blame." In some such words of earnest, almost intense urgency the President addressed Gen. MEADE—but in vain. Instead of securing to himself the advantage of taking the initiative against LEE, General MEADE surrendered that inestimable advantage to his able and enterprising enemy. The offensive was assumed by LEE, and he derived as much eclat from his movement on MEADE as an inferior force attacking a superior one could be reasonably expected to achieve. MEADE, however, thrown on the defensive, proved himself a good and skillful general—and no disaster occurred to our army, nor did the rebels accomplish anything of material importance by their movement. The net result just seems to have been this—that General MEADE has been convinced of his mistaken view of the strength of LEE, and we may hope will now endeavor to atone for his neglect to seize the opportunity which was presented to him, and which he was so urgently enjoined to improve.

Foreign.

The British Government have not only seized Laird's rams, but have stationed two frigates to prevent their being smuggled out. The attentions to the Russian officers in New York were exciting considerable comment.

Maximillian's answer to the Mexican deputation was regarded as a virtual acceptance of the throne, and he was expected to leave for Mexico early next year. The well informed Paris correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser says the Paris journals give a deceptive notion of the true situation in Europe. Every sensible Frenchman says that he can see no other issue to the dead lock on the Polish question than war. France, which has assumed to dictate, or, in milder terms, to arbitrate for Europe, has received from Russia a cutting insult, coupled with an invitation to cease correspondence on the subject—which is virtually a challenge to fight. Though no reply has been made to Gortschakoff's last note, the Western Powers are looking about for some escape from the dilemma, and thus France is waiting for something to turn up which shall either avert or precipitate a war. Her diplomacy will be directed to the finding of some combination which shall either force England and Austria to join her in the war, or force Russia to attack also—England and Austria, which amounts to the same thing. France proposes that the Poles be acknowledged as belligerents, which would almost certainly lead to war, and Austria and England accordingly shrink back. To declare the treaties of 1815, which bind Poland and Russia, null and void, as suggested by the French Ministry, would apply equally to Austria and Prussian Poland, which makes a new difficulty. The note of Prince Gorstchakoff has had a wonderful effect in checking French intervention in America, and the growing friendship between Russia and the United States, is an object of constant observation and inquietude. The speech of Earl Russell has also had a powerful effect in putting France on the retrograde track, as has also the big guns and big ships. The Emperor has been inquiring solicitously about the artillery performances at Charleston, and it is said his Government is quite embarrassed over the Florida, whose reception as a Confederate man-of-war has provoked the attacks of the liberal journals.

A CLERGYMAN HUNG BY THE REBELS.—A Chattanooga correspondent of the Chicago Tribune says:

Rev. Mr. Bussey, of the Christian Commission, was upon the field during the late battles, and materially aided in caring for the wounded. He was unfortunately taken prisoner when our forces withdrew from the field, and fell into the hands of Judge Terry, of California, who holds a position of some importance in the rebel army. Judge Terry is the man who shot Senator Broderick several years ago. With a brutal oath the murderer exclaimed, "He's a d——d abolition preacher. Boys, hang him!" Mr. Bussey's name does not appear in the list of prisoner's sent in by Bragg to the Provost Marshal, and it is feared the Judge has carried his brutal threat into effect.

It is a favorite story, that some time since a well-known Senator visited the President, asked a change in a certain particular relative to military operations. The President agreed that it was a good one, and promised that he would make it. Some time, however, intervened, and nothing was done, when the Senator again visited the executive mansion, and accosted the President with, "Well, I see you have not made the change." "No, sir; Gen. Halleck would not consent." "Well, then, why don't you dispose of Halleck, if he is always in the way?" "Well," said the President, "the fact is, a man who has no friends should be taken care of." The Senator retired, appreciating the President's dry compliment to the Commander-in-chief.

MR. CHARLES MACRAE, who has for some time been acting as American correspondent of the London Globe, failed to escape in the Persia on Wednesday.

Death of Lord Lyndhurst.

The last steamer from Europe brings intelligence of the death of John Singleton Copley, Lord Lyndhurst, the distinguished jurist and statesman. A son of the famous self-educated artist Copley, he was born in Boston, Mass., in 1772, and in his third year removed to England. He was educated at Trinity College, Cambridge, and received the highest honors of the university. Soon after he revisited America, returning to England in 1798 to prepare for the practice of the law, which he commenced in 1804, and slowly but surely toiled his way up the eminence in his profession, leaving his name upon the records of several of the most important state trials.

His success was from this time continuous, and he successively filled some of the highest offices of the State, being solicitor general, attorney general, master of the rolls, and finally, in 1827, chancellor, under the title of Baron Lyndhurst. Originally a liberal, he entered Parliamen in 1818 a tory, but afterward accepted the great seal under the liberal cabinet of Canning, and retained it through three administrations, in the last favoring the Catholic emancipation scheme, which he had opposed two years before. Under the administration of Earl Grey he was appointed lord chief baron of the exchequer, and on the nomination of the Peel cabinet of 1834, was restored to the chancellorship, but resigned soon after, and became an active leader of the opposition.

By his first wife, the widow of Lieutenant-Colonel Charles Thomas, he had three children, and three years after her death he married at the age of sixty-five a young Jewess beauty, Miss Goldsmith, and by her he had a daughter. His power as a speaker was very great, and his opinions carried the greatest weight. A writer in the Atlantic Monthly, who saw him in Parliament in 1855, says: "It was singular and somewhat touching to mark the deference paid by the peers to him, as he spoke upon that occasion."

Strength of the Rebel Armies—The Military Situation.

The Baltimore American publishes the following:

A very intelligent young man, a refugee from Richmond, who has been there all through the war, and who only succeeded in making his escape last Monday, has arrived here and communicated to the military authorities some important intelligence concerning the rebel armies.

In regard to the strength of their armies, he says that there is much misapprehension at the North. He claims to have good authority for stating that the strength of Lee's army, previous to the sending of the two corps to reinforce Bragg, did not exceed 60,000 efficient troops; that Bragg, with these reinforcements, had not over 40,000 men, and that he only managed to defeat Rosecrans by a surprise and attacking his isolated columns.

He further states that the story of re-enforcements having been sent to Gen. Lee from Charleston and other places, is totally incorrect. That there have been no troops sent to Lee, except in the way of deserters and conscripts; that none have returned from Bragg's army, and to such straits have the rebel authorities been reduced, that they are even forcing into the ranks those persons who have provided substitutes.

There was a general feeling of despondency in Richmond, and the fact was freely admitted that their armies were none of them sufficiently strong to assume offensive operations with any prospect of success; and that the want of men prevented Bragg from following up his success, and prevents him now from attacking the Union army at Chattanooga.

A LETTER from Norfolk, Va., states that on Saturday night a party of three men and five women, all residents of Portsmouth, were captured by a small detachment of the One Hundred and Forty-eighth New York Volunteers, near Lambert's Point, whilst endeavoring to run the blockade with a large quantity of miscellaneous goods, which were stowed away in a commodious wagon. Upon searching one of the men nearly a thousand dollars in gold were found ingeniously concealed between the lining and padding of his vest. The males were committed to Fort Norfolk and the females sent to the Atlantic Hotel, were they remain under guard.

GEOGRAPHICAL knowledge is not one of the strong points of the London Times, as is evinced in its disquisition on the battle of Chickamauga, and the Times editor says that "the field of the engagement was one of the numerous small streams that abound in the northern part of the State of Tennessee, called Chickamauga Creek. The whole region is mountainous, thickly wooded, and intersected by rivers. The Cumberland unites with the Tennessee, and the waters of both combined form one of the tributaries that fall into the Mississippi on its eastern bank."

The London Morning Post has been called on by a personal friend of Wendell Phillips, to authorize a contradiction of an announcement made by the American correspondent of the London Times to the fact, that Mr. B. refused to permit his son to enter the army when drawn as a conscript; when, in point of fact, Mr. Phillips has no son.

MILTON SWAYZE, one of the Metropolitan Police, has recovered a judgment of $4,000, in the Supreme Court, against Fernando Wood, for injuries claimed to have been sustained by the plaintiff during the riots of 1857. A number of other judgments have been obtained against the defendant, and other cases are still pending.—N. Y. Times.

IT is stated that a strong Union feeling began to manifest itself in Northern Texas about the time the news was received of the fall of Vicksburg and Port Hudson. Secret Union organizations were formed, the result of which was the election of Morgan, the Union candidate for Congress in the 1st Congressional District.

IT is said that a Provisional Government will soon be established in Mississippi, and Col. Markland, of Kentucky, is spoken of as Governor. Important movements are on foot, and it is thought that in a few weeks there will be an armed foe on the soil of Mississippi.
