Trials of Barnhart Lauth for the Murder of Peter Knauer. Tuesday afternoon, Nov. 17, Judges Sterrett, Mellon and Brown.

Court opened at two o'clock and resumed the testimony for the prosecution. John Strickle, brother-in-law of John Knauer, saw him in Kelly's tavern, after he had been shot. Dr. Wood testified that he was called to the scene of the shooting and that he found Lauth lying on the ground with a bullet wound in the back of his head.

Mr. Swartzkopf opened the case on behalf of defense, and after defining the law applicable to the killing in self-defense, stated that the defendant had been assaulted that day, by the deceased, when he was threatening to kill him. They would call witnesses to prove the dangerous character of the deceased, and the threat which he had made against Lauth, on the day of the difficulty.

Mr. Swartzkopf stated that he saw the difficulty at 6:30 o'clock in the afternoon. Lauth was behind the counter, Knauer stood in front of it, and Lauth was striking Knauer on the head with a brick. Lauth said he did not want to strike him, nor have anything to do with him.

William Grierson stated that the same as Lauth was a pick-fighter, Lauth begged him to desist from the fight, and he refused. Lauth then went to the door and tried to get out, but Knauer was standing outside of Grierson's store, at the time of this difficulty.

Coroner McClure yesterday held an inquest upon the body of Mary Cronin, a widow residing on Pennsylvania avenue, in the Eighth Ward. She had been complaining of illness, and retired to bed in the forenoon. About eleven o'clock she was found dead in her bed, and she had been afflicted with heart disease, and the jury found a verdict of "death from natural causes."

At the coroner held an inquest upon the body of Thomas Rush, aged eighty years, who died suddenly at 10 o'clock in the forenoon at his home, 1015 Pennsylvania street, Allegheny. The deceased had no friends here, and had been employed at the hotel for a year past, doing odd jobs. He had been ill since Friday, and he was able to get about all the time.
