8. RIDDER & CO.
MONDAY MORNING, JANUARY 26, 1863.

THE FUND OF JANUARY.

Truly, of next week, January 26, was the day appointed by the President for making the draft; but owing to the necessity of further legislation, which has not yet been perfected, it is impossible that the draft can take place on that day. It is said that it will be postponed until the first of February, which we think very probable, and we are quite as firmly of opinion that it will not be postponed beyond that day.

The 26th of January, however, is still a very important day for other than the draft. It is the day when the President will issue his proclamation, which will be the first step towards the execution of the law. It is also the day when the Congress will meet, and when the President will deliver his annual message to the people.

There is a sad and mournful contrast between the public order of the people in 1861 and the cold and mercenary spirit that exists at the present time. Then thousands of uneducated and untrained men were employed, and all the best talents of the country were put to the test. Now, however, the Government is content with a few well-to-do men, and the people are left to their own devices.

There is another class who have been especially favored—we mean the "nice middle men." Most of them, in our view, received handsome bounties when they entered upon their term of service. Many of them, it is said, bought their way out of the service, and they found in the field, and left in the field, to put an end to the rebellion and the war.

There were just sixty-one persons present, and the meeting was a very successful one. The speakers were all well known, and their addresses were all of a high order. The meeting was held in the evening, and was well attended.
