In general terms, the appearance of the metal from the different foundries may be summed up in two divisions, thus? Columbia, and Bellona foundry guars—mottled from: West Point and Pintsburgh guars—grey from. The locality from which the metal was drawn has no doubt influenced the tends, modified also by the different modes of treatment at the several foundries.

In secting for the character of fracture most desirable for gun metal, we would look for it between the lower motile of the Columbia and the higher grey of the West Point foundry, passing over the sattemer values of the Belloma and Pintsburgh irou. This fracture may therefore best be diaced as follower a set uniform months, passing into a light or bright grey, the spots of the mottle being so intimately blended and so meanly of the same has as to give the fracture a light or bright grey aspect.

A good deal is said in the report of the value of Gun Coston, and much time and money have been expended by the Department in testing fits value. The result of experiments are summed up by the examiners as follows:

1st. The explosive cotton, well prepared according to Schombein's formula, burns at a heat of 350 deg. Fahresheit, and it will, therefore, not set fire to guapowder. By other modes of preparation, it may be made to explode at a much lower temperature, jernst precastion should therefore be used in drying it.

2d. The projectif force of explosive cotton, in moderate charges, in the musket or in the transon, is nearly equal to that of twice it weight of the best grapowder.

2d. When compressed by hard ramming (as in siling a fine) it burns alowly, and after a short time it produces little or no fame.
