Senate, after an absence of nearly eight weeka—
What his labors dut of the Senate have been may be judged from his written defence of his son-in-law, Col. Fremont, which would occupy three pages of the smallest type of the Gazette. There is immense labor in this defence, as indeed there was during the trial. It is, however, characterized by the bitterness of invective and obstinacy of temper peculiar to the Senator from Missouri, who permits his judgment to be warped, and his feelings—his passions, I might say,—to have complete mastery of the Senator from Missouri, who permits his judgment to be warped, and his feelings—his passions, I might say,—to have complete mastery of the feelings passions, I might say,—to have complete mastery of the feelings passions, I might say,—to have complete mastery of the Guidel Benton's defence, you may learn what his occurse will be hereafter. Gen. Kearnoy comes in during the trial. It is, however, characterized by the bitterness of invective and obstinacy of temper peculiar to the Senator from Missouri, who permits his judgment to be warped, and his feelings,—his passions, I might say,—to have complete mastery of his reison. From the concluding paragraph of Cokonel Benton's defence, you may learn what his course will be hereafter. Gen. Kearnoy comes in only for one-third of the Missourian's hostility. The Government is blamed for giving fanty orders to the two principal commanders in California, and in the two principal commanders in California, and in addition for allowing the Court Martial at all. Especially, he says in the conclusion of his argument, do I blame the Government,—meaning the Presi-dent of the United States, who, unless restrained

All these were over ruled, and the largely preponderating and finally controlling seminent was that a Couvantion should be held for the nomination of candidates for President and Vice President of the United States. The Ohio reports. The ex-Chancellor of the Excher uer reports a minority Bill for relieving the Treas ary by the issue of Treasury notes. It is probable that the loan will be insisted upon by the House.— The Executive and his friends in Congress, are neither content, either rigidly to administer the sub exactions. The struggle in the House will be be-tween a dishonest and am honest policy. So long as Government dues are paid in Treasury notes and the Treasury notes are paid in Bank paper, but little harm can come of the exaction, but the authority to issue Treasury notes at all, is not only incompatible with the sub-Treasury law itself, but in the present state of the country, with sound poli-cy. The House might be willing to repeal the spe-cie clause of the sub-Treasury law, and the law allogether, were it practical to do so, but with the for no one feels secure while either are in existence. The sting of the amb Treasury law is only extracted just now, and may be restored, and with double force, with the least turn of the wheel of fortune.
