T submit—the Deputes at the same time resolving to impeach the Ministry if the Chambers, and that if their motion for all impeachment should be negatived, they would resign in a body. All these were becoming the theme, and the only theme of conversation and ungry discussion in the Cafes and on the Boulevards, and fresh fuel was added to the excitement by the appearance of a proclamation from the Prefect of Police, forbidding assemblages of the people, and an order of the Day forbidding the appearance in uniform of (National Guards, unless aspecially ordered for duty.

At one ordect on Thursday, Louis Philippe, no looper a King, was glad to secure his personal safety by a hurried exit from one extremity of the Tuilleries, while an infernated moly were entering at the other. Thus the very climax of the revolution was attained in three days, another trivial journ, the Revolution of 1830 repeated, as to the time of accomplishment, but with more of the character of 1759 and 1752.

After Louis Philippe's addication on Thursday, the Duchess of Orleans and her infant son repaired to the Chamber of Deputies to claim protection—This was promised, but nothing more. The Chamber refused to recognize the rights of the Come of Paris or the Constitution of the Regency. The more moderate members and those disposed to support the regency withdrew, headed by the President, (M. Sauzet) who declared the sitting at anend. But many of the mob had penetrated, the Chamber, and encouraged by them the radical deputies resolved themselves into seasion, declared that seasion permisonet, and declared for a Republic.

All Europe is convisient. As young and the people of the people. The reign of Louis Philippe has come to an end, and the dry of Republice has come to an end, and the dry of Republice has come to an end, and the dry of Republice has come to an end, and the dry of Republice has come to an end, which is the people of the world furnishes no parallel for the suddenness—the completeness of this act of popular sovereignity; for although the French people had begon to feel; the yole which their masters had forged, httle was it apprehended that the remoustrance of a unanish, and as it has turned out, an invincible people, would have found such terrible expression. TASSEY & HEST too celevision balland of Roderds, which terminates in a chorus is honor of those who "conquer and die for their country". This chorus runs as follows:

"Soldats Francais, chanter Roland;
Son-destin est digne d'envie;
Henreus qui peut en combattant
Vaincre et mourir pour sa patrie."

All ton avenues to the Chamber of Deputies were immediately filled with troops. Opposite the bridge several regiments of cavalry were stationed and the Flace do la Concorde was similarly lined. The main street's leading from the Chambers were occupied by infantry. In the road leading from the Chambers to the Hospital of the Invalids, strillery and cavalry were blended. Prior to this, however, but not withis reach of my personal observation, fifs I could not be in two places at once, and the crowd was so dense as to limit the viewy an affact, had been made upon the Chamber of Deputics by several thousands of the populace, who secaled the walls and railings of the garden, and to the number of ture or four handred gained the interior and filled the galleries. Among the numerous rights of the people which have felt the repressive haud of the Crown and Government, was that of public meetings—a right inherent in the critizens of every Constitutional State—a right declared by M. Guizot himself, in 1634, to be nuizized by the Charter. The progress of reform lately met with the determined opposition of the Government, and the banquets were summarily suppressed by the proclamation of the French Cabinet. On Toesday last, a great banquet was to have been held in Fairs, at mon, but upon the afternoon of Monday, the order far its prohibition appeared. D marij ISAIAH DICKEY & Co
