members of the Orleans family; but we suppose that a more just and generous arrangement will be made when reason and conscience resume their sway. The Duke d' Montpensier has something, we suppose, in Spain, and the Prince d'Joinville in Brazil. But the main dependence of the family will probably be on what the ex-king may have "salted down" in foreign countries, and en what the justice of the new Republic may think proper to restore of the private wealth remaining in France.—N. i, which our children, and children's children, are to find a home?

This language must grate barshly upon the eart of the Democracy of the South.—It is quite as pointed as any thing ever said by Giddings or Palery. But the Equirer and Examiner rarely, it ever, fud rooms for the numerous intimations of fraternal feeling, which so frequently appear in the Loco Foco papers of the North. They find it more politic to contine their selections to similar declarations and the politic to contine their selections to similar declarations and the Northern Whot—Rick. Whig.
