Much has been said about General raylors ineutial and culturated capacities; no man was ever more wronged than he has been, if some newspaper scribblers were to be believed. I profess to know something about him at the time referred to above; holding a position in the staff department of the army, I had frequent opportunities of companionable with him. He was rather inclined to a thoughtful factiurnity; never arginged in light or fivolous conversation; grave and sedate in his whole appearance, all his words and actions gave a striking correspondence to the externals of the man. His library, which was pretty large, containtained many valuable works on the most important subjects which engage the attention of the sincere enquirer after useful knowledge, and his leisure hours were occupied with great industry in their persual. Men are greatly enistaken if they suppose that Gen. Taylor has alone devoted his energies and powers of mind to the science of warfar from it. Few men of our country, of General Taylor's age, at the time of which I speak—he being then somewhere about 2½ years of age—had stored-their minds with more general and useful ins formation than he possessed; and his sober, steady habits, joined to strong intellectual endowments, were peculiarly adapted to the growth of those propensities, which, at this sariy age, were so happily developing themselves. look upon the effort with astoniahment, that some newspaper scribblers, stump orators, street corner gabblers, and bar room politicians, are trying to impress the country with the opinion that General Taylor wants all the qualifications necessary to make a good President. Sir, the contrary is the fact. He is free, and always has been, from the school of intrigue and political management. Possessing a strong, intelligent, discriminating mind, cultivated by a regular course of studious habits and untring industry, the whole built upon and austained—not upon a platform of principles prescribed by other men—by a spotlers reputation flowing from integrity of purpose, honesty of hear, and pure love of country. These are General Taylor's qualifications—they are above all price.

But always has been as he is,
And will be, true old Zack,

No laurels sought he e'er to gain, By wasting gallant blood: But true as steel, as granite firm; Has by his country stood! And when on Palo Albo's height, He first was brought to bay, He did but dare as duty called, And daring won the day. And daring won the day.

And won again the day.
Yet still amid the roar of arms,
The rage of the attack,
Of women weak and infant wail,
Thought brave but kind old Zack.

And when his stoutest legions all
Were severed from his side,
And he was almost left alone,
The tsunt of war to hide;

And when on Buena Vista's height,
Were gleaming in the sun,
St Anna's bands with banners bright,
Far more than four to one—
He dared again that dread array,
And boldly bearing down,
Midst tramp of steed and clash of steel,
Maintained his high renown.
And as before the tempest king,

* It is a singular fact-that Gen. Taylor has fought all his battles under serious disadvantages, or against fearful odds and the advice of his officers. He has never wavered after having determined, and determined his his first fight at Fort Harrison, himself and many of his tittle company were down, or just recovering from the autumnal fever. He has been blamed for approaching the Seminoles at Okechobee in a direction that occasioned much loss of file; but these Indians were hard to find at any rate and harder to find together, and the result showed that he fought them in the most effective manner.

and Samuel, France, of Massillon, was appointed Secretary.

S. M. Roberts, Esq. of Philadelphis, the Principal Engineer of the Road, a dunder whose direction the surveys had been made, was introduced to the meeting. Mr. R. presented to the andietice a general view of the Rail roads in the State of Ohio, either completed or in a state of forwardness, as also the several mutes away in contemple. of the Rail roads in the State of My sisters clustering at the gate upleted or in a state of forward. My little nephew's carnest air, also the facilities they afford the travelling public. He spoke is postive terms, not only of the practical bility of the rout from Flutburgh to Genton, Massilon, Wooster, and Manafield, and thence westward to the State line, but of the perfect slaptation of the country to the construction of a Rail Road, and at an expense from one half to three quarters less than the cost of the New England and Pennsylvania Roads. He showed the distance from Pittaburgh to Massillon by the Salem route to be but one hundred and one miles, and estimated the cost of grading and hedging at $5000 per mile.

After Mr. R. had concluded, General Jarvis, of Massillon, presented some highly interesting statical accounts of the various Rail roads in New England: showing that although the cost per mile varied from $20,000 to $75,000, yet these roads constructed at such comparatively great expences.

England: showing that although the cost per mile varied from $20,000 to $75,000, yet these roads constructed at such comparatively great expences, yield an annual dividend upon the Stocks of from 6 to 24 per cent.

Mr. H. B. Wellman then addressed the meeting at some length, showing the great advantages that would result to the sgriculturists from the construction of the road; he demonstrated, contrary to the generally received opinion, that Rail roads, as a means of moving off the heavy productions of a means of moving off the heavy productions of a country, can successfully compete with Canal and Lake transportations and the seasons. He demonstrated that a barrel of flour could be transported upon Rail roads from Massill. seasons. He demonstrated that a barrel of floor could be transported upon Rail roads from Massill-on to New York, at a cost of twenty-five cente less than the the freights the produce men are now pay-ing, or than the average /reights upon the Lake and River routes.

One would suppose that such suicidal conduct would be a sufficient scarning to men of honest intentions and common intelligence, for all time thereafter.

But the same is now being played by the leaders of the *Free Soil" party—they are crying out free soil, free peech, and free later, at the same time seeking votes for a man who, when the chief magistrate, denounced their principles and objects, and ridiculed their practices as fanatical. They are seeking votes for a man whose election is without the range of possibility, and thus directly and positively adding the election of Cass, who is the political antipode of every thing they profess to pray for.
