The Situe J Pennsylvania, like any other Independent Sovereignty, has the clear right to declare that a Slave brought within her territory becomes ipso facto a freeman. This was and is a principle of the common law (Somer-set's case, State Trial, vol. 20.) and is in terms as-serted by the 10th section of Use Art of 1750. Pennsylvania retaines all the rights of arg other Sovereignty which has has not ceded or renounced in entering in that congast which limits her other-wise jetnary power in regard to the passage of such anything in that congast which limits her other-wise pienary power in regard to the passage of such a law as the act of 1857, then of course the act of Assembly must yield to the paramoont suthority of the Constitution of the Diried States.
