My agreement with the proprietor was that I should superintend the construction of the bridge without any pay whatever, but during the fine of the building of the bridge, I might sleep in the Gardens, and if the bridge should succeed, it should be called "Hemisgan's Bridge."

I lodged in an old tion's cage, not strong emorgifor a bion, but by putting some straw on the floor, it held me very well, and indeed was a greater luxury than I had for many months. The carpenters that worked on the bridge somstimes gave me part of their dianer. On this I lived, and was happy. It was a linite novel however, to see a man in rags directing gentlemanly looking head carpenters. The bridge trumphed, and the cost was £8, and was the greatest hit ever made in London! I have now more orders for bridges from the aristocracy than I can execute in ten years, if I would do them. Indeed, I have been so much among the aristocracy of late that what with high living, being so sudden a transition from starving, I have been compelled to go through a course of medicine, and am just now convalencent. Of course, any thing once built precludes the possibility of taking a patent in England, but its merits and value are beyond all calculation.

A permanent, beautiful, and steady bridge may be thrown across a river half a mile wide, out of the reach of floods, and without any thing touching the water, at a most inconsiderable expense. The American patent is well secured at home I know I shall continue to build a low more bridges of larger and larger spars, and one of them a rail road bridge, in order that I may perfect forgell in them, so as to commence fair when I reach America. I have a great many more accounts of my exploits since I came to Stafford, but must defer sending them until next time. I beg you will write me, for ow, since a correspondence is opened, I shall be able to tell you something about England. I know it well. Upon a very cold, day in winter, they were driving, sloog in a sledge wrapped up in fore from head to foot. Even their faces were mostly covered; and you could asswere white, and glistening with frost. At list they saw a poor into who had sunk down, be nambed and foozen, in the snow.

We must stop and help him, said one of the fravelets. Stop and help him, replied the other, you will never think of stopping on such a day as this? We are half froren ourselves, and ought to be at our journey's end as soon as possible. But d cannot leave this man to perish, rejoined the more humas graveller, I must go to his relief, and has stopped the the sledge. Come, said he, come help me to rouse him.

Not 15, replied, the other, I have too much regard for my own life to expose myself to this freezing stamsphere asy more than is accessary.
