See next page for Telegraphic News. THE CINCINNATI GAZETTE speaks of the contemated Pennsylvania and Ohio Railroad, as 'design'. ed' to divert trade from the 'Queen City.' We do not think any such 'design' enimates the breasts any of its projectors and friends. The object, of course, is to open up a market for Pittsburgh i the fruitful northern and middle counties of Ohio, and to bring their produce to this mart. Very little of this trade, we presume, goes to Cincinnal its natural tendency being the Lakes. One object of the road is to open up rail road communication with Cincinnati, by means of the various routes which are constructed or to be constructed, acros te of Ohio, from the Lake to the River, in which event the trade along the various routes will competition between the two cities.

We admit that the probability is, that this road will be continued to the western border of the State, as the charter admits, and through Indians and Illinois, to St. Louis-being the only and true great central rail road, from Philadelphia to the Mississippi. This will doubtless divert trade from Cincin-

seek the best market, and thus excite a spirited

Cincinnati has long been aware that such a great central road will be constructed, and that she has endeavored, and is endeavoring, to make her route is made to vary far from a direct line. Fearful of this very enterprise, which Pittsburgh has undertaken, she has striven with great real to dis feet all rail road projects from St. Louis and the sippi river, eastwardly, to that point, and knowing that it was too southwardly for a route through Pittsburgh, she has given every encour-agement to the Baltimore and Wheeling, or Fish agement to the Baltimore and Wheeling, or Fish Creek, or Parkersburgh route, and has projected a rail road through Chillicothe, in the direction of Parkersburgh.

It is evident to the most casual observer, that a central rail road, designed to afford facilities for communication for the great west should take a central position between the Lakes and the River, ing a mighty trunk into which various lateralroads should pour their business. Cincinnati be ing on the river, takes the road too far from a direct line, and brings the road also into direct com-

ure has pointed out Pittsburgh as the true point where this central road should cross the Ohio. At any point above this, the obstructions nsurmountable, except along the Lake shore and any point below presents obstacles of a most formidable character. The table lands of Ohio and of the great west, come within fifty miles of the river at this point, and the aummits to be overcome are extremely depressed. Every step you go south of this, increases the distance to the table lands, and the difficulties to be overcome. From Cincinnati to Parkersburgh or Wheeling, and from thence to Columbus, taxes a road over the most difficult country imaginable, and if a road is ever built on that route, it can never compete with the great central route, from Pittsburgh west.

It is not surprising, then, that Cincinnati should

Ohio Railroad, sait will most assuredly be the main central trank of a great system of rail roads which will connect the immense country lying between will connect the immense country tying octworn
