relation to the destruction of the Union Factory by fire. This reponder is a though of abuse, and no thing else. Our article is dendunced as a libel on the Post and the Democratio Party, and "false in fact, and isfie by insimately," and by more pitches of a like sort. No effort, however, is made to rebut our arguments—polore angle falsohood is pointed out—the editor! "Selvespect!" will sot permit him to reply in detail.

There was nothing in dor remarks to touch the editor to ke anity, but its truth. That was the two down dwhich has wribuspsuch a howl of ago ny from him. Our statement amounted to this and this only—that the exidement originated by the riots, and fomented and kept up by the course of the Pittsburgh Morning, Post, has caused our insurance offices to decline faking risks on cotton factories, unless at ruinous rates,—and that, owing to the same cause, the Union Factory would not be rebuilt; and that it would prevent any for their investment, or reinvestment, of capital in that branch of business, in this cay and vicinity, for years to come; and until an entire change takes place in the conduct and, feelings of those who possess the means of so might insichief.

This the Post calls "false,"—libellous"—the "cool effort of a base, malignant heart". False in what respect? Is it false that insurance has been more liacreased, in consequence of this excitement!— Has the Post the hardinos? to deny so palpable a fact? We have suce understood, from another factory, that their rates have been increased, in consequence of this excitement!—
Has the Post the hardinos? to deny so palpable a fact? We have suce understood, from another factory, that their rates have been increased, in consequence of materially increased since the rosts, and that they were compelled to go to New England to insurance, and that it was at last effected with difficulty.—Is a thought and hardinos and the recording the resonance of the section of the recording transport of the report—more than any direct statement—type of the prope

st last effected with difficulty.

Is it not true, that the Usion Factory will not be robuilt, and that the Geision is owing principally, if not wholly, to the vexistions interference with their business, by the Posignard a set of meddling, officious charlatans, who (fifect to manage the affairs of the operatives, although they could never manage any successfully of their own?

Or, will the éditor say, that his colline has not necessarily produced such a state of affairs. He may say, if he will, that his did not design it do so—that he only wished to gain a little cheap politic alternative for his party, and a cheracter for a little extra love for the working classes for himself—and that he had no wish to infure the business of the place, and destroy its manufacturing interests.—This may be possibly true. But if so, il proves the wasdom of the saying, that Gols should not be trusted with edge tools. A flippant, conceited, and intensely selfash exceptible, and intensely selfash exceptible, and intensely selfash exceptible engine of the privacy is more dangerous than a cool headed knove, for he has not sense enough. For the former knowledge, man has lattle desire; but he acquisition of the latter, the hoarding of the antimitation may have been induced by reasons which it known, would greatly racidity is statements, but a twoise may have been induced by reasons which it known, would greatly racidity is statements, but a twoise may have been induced by reasons which it known, would greatly racidity is statement, but it on any provise must have reterence to the reports at not to any provise must have reterence to the reports at not to any provise must have reterence to the review mu

It is impossible to determine the relative impor-tance of any branch of study, unless we view it with relation to some system, or with reference to an end to be accomplished. The question, then, arises, what is the end to be accomplished by that it only exists here from wheer necessity. The buildings and machinery are here, and the proprietors are compelled to igo on, but they would gladly sell out at a great saterface, and quit a pursuit which has brought theil, since these troubles began, nothing but vexation anxiety, obliquy, and loss.

These are sorrowful truths, and for the honor and prosperity of our city, we would gladly bury them in obliviou; but malignant diseases require severe remedies; and we feel assured dhat timless the evil is checked by the strong power of a stern public opinion, before it extends further, other branches of business will feed its blighting indusence, until our city will become; place risther to be shunned than sought for, by those intending to embark in manufacturing operations.

The Post puts forwardias its ever ready excuss for all its sins against the welfare of the city, its attachment to the fen Hour Law. But this shall not serve it. It went further than this, and tecame the apologiat for rioters, and the bassaliant of nearly every person connected with the proprietorship of the factories, and encouraged and kept up a spirit of dissatisfaction, heaft-burnings, pealousies, and every evil passion. It is sonly a day or type and the content of the correct of the city is and every evil passion. It is sonly a day or type tife. The study of the classes, if properly pursued, is not the mere memorizing of words and guessing the meaning of a passage, but it is the exercise of discovering the meaning of a passage, but it is the exercise of analysis, in combining these parts according to the principles of syntactical structure, recourse is all to the opposite process of synthesis; and in the opposite process of synthesis, and in the principles of syntactical structure, recourse is all to the opposite process of synthesis, and in the foreign of the opposite process of synthesis, and in the principles of syntactical structure, recourse is all to the opposite process of synthesis; and in the opposite process of synthesis; and in the opposite process of synthesis, and in the principles of the English Classics. To under the opposite process of synthesis, and in the principles of the English Classics. To under the synthesis and Milton, for example, requires not only a through knowledge of the English language, but also of mythology, througherd opinions, and may a three subjects. When in his lofty verse, he speaks of that crystalline sphere: whose balance weighed the trepidation talked, he becomes altogether unintelligible to the reader; unless he has some knowledge of the Ptolemean system of astronomy; and without some acquaintance with the diseases of a three systems of the sy of the classics cannot with advantage be superseeded by any rise. Reference wil merely be made to a passage in Prof. Six report, in which apeaking of drawings, he remarks: "It cultivates those very qualities of mind, only with sorer results, if was so printed, but Prof. Six read it "only with surer results for practical purposes." Which it is our aim to cultivate in the study of the ancient languages." Without detracting in the least from the great advantages to be derived from drawing, the writer is of opinion that the author of the report has been mided on this subject by for great apartiality to what has merely an industrial bearing
