THE CALIFORNIA QUESTION.

We regret that our explanation of Gen. TAYLON's course in regard to a Government for California is unsatisfactory to the New York Evening Fost. Although it appears that the General was guillies of the specific fault laid at his door by the Post, still he must not be let off. Riame must be inputed to him somehow. Was he in favor of Walker's mendmant, he was wrong. Was he in favor of Mr. Webiser's, he was wrong. Was he in favor of Mr. Webiser's, he was wrong. Was he in favor of miner or any which would suppress anarchy and bloodhade and provide the restraints of law for the new territory, still he was wrong. The Post, we tear, is determined not to be pleased. It now raises a new objection, and desires to know why Gen. Taylors should have meddled in the matter at all he was not yet President, and it was altogether officious in him to attempt any influence on shaping the legislation of Congress. It is very true that the General was not President on the 3d of March, but he was to become President to next-day, and on him and his Administration were to therefore the embarrassments of leaving California without any civil government, and the responsibilities of supplying by some means or other the absence of legislative provision. Was not his anxiety on the subject parintic, and his interposition justicable—nay, imaperative? Every day's intelligence from the Pacific depicts the deplorable state of flaviesaness which crists in the new territory, threatening indeed to make it one universal sirces of uninciple—the Prést would yield up the country to all the horrors which must ensue from the absence of legal authority. Fortunately, by the preserverance of Mr. Wassixa through the last night of the seasion, and his vigilance at the last night, of the seasion, and his vigilance at the fast hour, the revenue have have been extended over the territory. (We are not sure that the Post is satisfied even with this, as there is no anti-slavery provise in the act.) But what is in the power of the Executive to not sure that the Post is satisfied even with the act.) But what is in the power of the Executive to do, if any thing, under the constitution, to remedy the omission of Congress and prevent the evils which mensoe the country, is an embarrassing question; it is one which, foreseen by the President, he endeavored to provide for, but, failing in that, humanity itself demands that it be iner in some way, whatever is consultated and it is the consultation of the cons
