The Washington Union professes to be dreadfully alarmed for the stability of our institutions and the dignity of the Crovernment; for what reason, gentle reader? Why, forsooth, because the President is entirely too Democratic in his notions, to judge in matters of moment as himself. Wastingtons, May 21, 1549.

The asual meeting of the eabinet took place to to day, but I do not learn that any thing of greater importance was done than the superceding of some of Mr. Polk's collectors on the northern frontier.

There is no reason to suppose that the eabinet is in possession of official advices from California of the same purport as the latest accounts published in the newspapers. The substance of this in telligence is, that a decided disposition has been manifested by the Californians to set up a government for themselves, though of a temporary and provisional character, and such a one as will serve ment for the interval which must elapse before the admission of that territory as a sovereign state of the Union; that the inhabitants have and profess not the least respect for the military, government, which some pretend has been of right continued there since the end of the war, and that they are desirous of securing themselves against the introduction among them of African slavery.

You will have learned from the telegraph that a report has been put into circulation that, in consideration of such a state of things in this latitude.
