wareness and Decline of the Expire.

After all, these efforts of Turkey to get up a "martial and awashing outside" remind one of an impotent old dotard creeping into fine armor and strutting under borrowed plumes. The Ottoman Empire has best its virility, and does got contain within itself a single element of National greatness, nor a solitary germ of social regeneration. Its carcass is only upheld by the rival pealousies of the three great powers of Europe, when that sustaining force ceases to act, in consequence of open may or secret compromise, the earthy inhebrance of the Ottoman Sultains will fall to the ignouse for ever. The Turks themselves have; a presentiment that their days are well-night numbered; and on seconnt of this they bury their days on the Asiatic sate of the Bosphorus. A book which they regard as canonical and holy, predicts he downtail lishment, which period, reconing in Lunar years, the Mahdment-dam of the Octoman Sultains.
