"It is put that the Legista should forever remain free as their continuought.

Like Crear of an earlier, and Napoleon of a later age, his noble talents were equally conspicuous in the field and in the cabinethe knew both how to conquer and rule men and make laws. Contrary to the marking of the dark age in which he had the misfortune to live, Altred sedulously, applied himself to the culture and mental elevation of his people. He sent his men into the dark quary of the multitude, to bring out and fashion rude spirits, priceless as the Parian marble or the yellow gold. Himself set the royal example of study in the scanty sciences and literature of his time; and indeed the history of his mental struggles and successes, is the literary history of his generation, so far as concerns the English nation.

In the days of this prince, learning was regarded as an unkingly acquirement, and very generally despised by crowned heads—that was bom with Alfred; but the circumstance of an unkingly acquirement, and very generally despised by crowned heads—that was bom with Alfred; but the circumstance that kindled his ardent mind into a love of study and learning, was charactoristic. Judith, his step-mother, was seated one as the property of the book to the cost when would first learn to read it. The other prince of successions of the book to the cost when would first learn to read it. The other prince of successions are also become an all the same dime of presenting would the offer, and he diligently applied and Codman, two celebrated Saxon poets—with a happy indement, she proposed to have been proved it to his mother, and received the one who would first learn to read it.
