FURTHER PARTICULARS.

It has not been ascertained in what manner the estructive fire, on Friday night, originated. It is said, by some, to have commerced in the third story of Hyan's building, by others, is the fourth. It bruke out as should still past eleven clock, and from the dryness of the material the flames spread through the immense building, from Fith street to Virgia Albry, in a few munutes. The firmen exerted themselves nobly, to prevent them from communicating with the surrounding buildings, but, notwithstanding that there was scarcely any wind, the intensity of the heat overmastered their efforts; the magnificent new church, belonging to the Second Presbyterian Congregation, caught, and, in half an bour, was reduced to a blackened abell. The walls, and the beautiful stone front, are still standing. The walls of Hyan's factory fell to the ground. said, by some, to have commenced in the third aurounding buildings,
