FOR THE PET DOG.

Have you a pet dog, or one which you think much of for his good qualities? Realizing that the change of season is with us, it would be well to begin now and give him a tablespoonful of castor oil regularly every four weeks, and with plenty of water to drink. We are the proud owner of an English bull dog, who, for 14 years, has had his oil, frequent baths—essential, as he is pure white—and always a dish of water where he expects to find it. Today he is as active, keen-sighted, and hearing and scent as good as many a much younger dog. Dip your spoon in warm water first, and the oil will readily slide off.—Mrs. Ernest Morry, in the Boston Post.

There were a very young and obviously bride-and-bridegroomish couple, insists the Argonaut. On entering the tea shop the maid tactfully led them to a little side room which chanced to be unoccupied. Tea was ordered and served. As the waitress was leaving the room the young man discovered an important fault in the service. "Oh, waitress," he said, "may we have a spoon?" "Oh, yes," said the girl. "I won't come back for ten minutes, and I quite think you will be able to have the room all to yourselves."

A HARDY TYPE OF PEACH.

This is a line of work which the Department of Agriculture is following closely, and during last year a dozen hardy varieties of seedling peaches, bearing fruit of good quality and appearance, have been segregated. These varieties represent a season of ripening from July 1 to November 1. They are uniformly of the Chinese Cling group, and from them will probably come a hardy race of peach stock that will extend the area of successful peach culture several hundred miles north of the present limit. It will also extend the season of ripening fully thirty days.—Indiana Farmer.

THE NEW APPLE CULTURE.

Some hoed crop should be grown in the orchard for a few years but wheat, oats or hay crop should never be taken from a young orchard, as they take fertility and moisture that should go to the trees. After six or eight years crops should not be taken from the orchard unless some fertilizer is used, and it is a good plan to use some before that time. I believe in clean cultivation for the orchard. I use a cutaway harrow early in the spring and cultivate until about the middle of July. I then drill about a bushel of cow peas to the acre, using about 100 pounds of muriate of potash, and 300 pounds of acid phosphate per acre. It is best to drill the peas in rows about two and one-half feet apart and keep the cultivator going till the vines are too large to cultivate. The vines should be left on the land till the spring to serve as a mulch and to keep the land from washing. They will lose no fertility by drying. I go over the vines early in the spring with the cutaway and they are cut up fine, mixed with the soil and all decayed in less than two months. The peas can be picked off and saved for seed.—Correspondence Green's Fruit Grower.

SOIL FOR TOMATOES.

Having decided to raise tomatoes this year for my first, and not knowing the kind of ground needed to get best results, I would ask through the next issue of your paper for information about it.

I have one field which has been in clover two years, and it is high ground; also another field which is low, black, and has a glossy hard clay under four inches of black. It is stalk ground. Which field would be the best, and should fertilizer be used in either case?

Tipton County. W. C. Answer: The tomato does fairly well in most all of our Western soils, but one of medium fertility is to be preferred. Too rich soil produces too much vine in proportion to fruit. This would be the case in your black land. A fairly good clay loam generally gives a satisfactory yield of well shaped, fine fruit. If fertilizers are used let them be applied in moderate quantity near the roots when planting. Some growers prefer a light, sandy loam with fertilizers. As to clover sod, E. B. Voorhees, in Farmers' bulletin, No. 76, says:

"A clover or timothy sod, or a green crop, such as rye, may precede the tomato crop, provided it is plowed either in fall or very early spring in time to permit of a thorough mellowing by cultivation before the plants are set."—Indiana Farmer.

FOUR O'CLOCKS.

These are erect, bushy, quick growing herbs. There are ten species, mostly natives of South Africa, the commonest of which is known as Japapa. Another name for this flower is Marvel of Peru.

While naturally perennials, they are grown as tender annuals, flowering late in the summer and fall. Any soil of reasonable fertility will grow them, and they thrive even in poor situations. After once established they will continue to bloom until frost without attention.

Seeds may be sown in the spring indoors or out, good results being obtained by sowing directly in their permanent place. The plants should be one foot apart each way.

The flower has no corolla, but the calyx is colored and tubular shaped, so the casual observer may mistake it for a true corolla. All shades of red and yellow and also white flowers may be obtained in the common varieties, and one or two have variegated foliage. They open late in the afternoon and remain open until morning. These plants will be found useful as a background for a flower bed or along a fence, or a large mass will present a good appearance. The foliage is smooth and glossy.

These plants often come up year after year from self-sown seeds and sometimes they produce tuberos roots which may be dug up and stored like those of the dahlia. — Indianapolis News.
