Millin and Centre County Railroad.—We will state, for the benefit of those of our readers who may have concluded that this road is among the impossibilities, that it has been shown to be not only feasible in itself, but a fact that will be accomplished sooner than most of our people expect it. We have been furnished with some of the notes made of the route by Chief Engineer Byers, from which we extract the following:

"The distance from Bellefonte to Milroy, by the experimental survey that has been made during the past month, is thirty-six miles. The grade does not exceed forty five feet per mile ascending from Bellefonte to Bear Meadow Creek. From Bear Meadow Creek to Potts's a distance of eight miles, the grade descends one hundred and twenty feet per mile on straight lines, and equated on curves. There will be two or three short tunnels on Spring Creek, the distance saved by tunnelling, however, will more than pay for the tunnels. Mr. Byers is of the opinion that there will be about two miles of heavy work crossing Bear Meadow, another mile near Potter's Mills, and two or three more near Milroy, while the balance of the line can be graded very cheaply. He tells us that lines from Bear Meadow Creek, by the way of Bousburg, will be surveyed next month, and that a map, profile and estimates will be made as soon after the surveys are completed, as possible, showing the different routes and cost. Sufficient to say, that the road will cost very much less than was supposed, as less than $750,000 will be required to put the entire line from Bellefonte to Milroy in readiness for the cars. We are glad to know that our people are becoming awake to the importance of this line of road, and we shall have more to say on this matter at another time.—National.

Fantastical Punishment of a Child.
Mary Swinger was on Saturday sentenced at Rochester, N. Y., to six months' imprisonment for having a few months' since, burned the hands of the daughter, seven years of age, by holding them over the stove. The Rochester Union says:

It was alleged by the prisoner, it will be remembered, when in the Police Court, that the little girl had stolen a piece of candy, and it was to deter her from committing further thefts that she punished her in the manner she did. By roasting the little one's hands over the stove she said she intended to give her an idea of what hell is, a place to which she would surely go if she stole any more. A person would naturally suppose that a woman who would inflict such a dreadful punishment on a little child is a very she-devil, but Mrs. S. is not to be placed in that category. She thought it her duty to punish the child to save its soul from perdition, and nothing could so well convey her idea of perdition to the little one's tender mind as roasting its hands over a "young hell," the withering fire of a cooking stove. The exclamations of the little girl—"Oh! mother, it hurts!"—"Oh! mother, it hurts awfully!"—and the noises of the crackling flesh, did not make the woman desist, and the interference of neighbors only prevented her from inflicting injuries which would doubtless have proved permanent. But few women in this city have a more benevolent and peaceful looking countenance than hers. We are not quite sure that Mrs. Swinger is of entirely sound mind.

GREAT EARTHQUAKE IN SOUTH AMERICA.

Interesting Particulars—Its Commencement and Incidents—Statement of an eye-witness.

We have published several accounts of the great earthquake in South America; but the event is one of so much importance in the history of the world, that further particulars cannot fail to be of interest. A gentleman who was present at Arica—describes what he saw and experienced.

Arica was a sea port town of the Republic of Peru, about two hundred miles southeast of Arequipa, and its population was about 19,000 souls. The gentleman who gives the detailed account had been in the port of Arica for some time, and at the hour when the destructive convulsions of the earth's surface began, he was on board a vessel off the harbor. The day before, on the 12th of August last he and several others slept at their lodgings in town, when about midnight a slight commotion occurred, which caused him and some other inmates of the same building to rush out into the lane in their night clothes; but they were only laughed at for their foresight.

On the following afternoon they were just finishing dinner on board of a vessel in the harbor, when about twenty minutes past five o'clock in the afternoon immense clouds of dust were seen at a distance of some ten miles South of Arica. This, of course, attracted attention as a matter of unusual occurrence. The volume of clouded dust came nearer and nearer, and it was observed from the deck of the vessel, on which our informant took his stand, that the peaks of mountains in the chain of Cordilleras began to wave and to like reeds in a storm. There could have been no optical delusion about it for the sea was calm and the vessel was perfectly quiet. A few minutes after it was observed that from mountains near to Arica whole piles of rock rent themselves loose, and large mounds of earth and stone rolled down the sides. Very soon it was noticed that the whole earth was shaking, and that a good old fashioned earthquake was in progress. By comparing distances of ports reached by the earthquake successively, and computing the time by exact measurement, it was ascertained that the volcanic element under the surface of the globe at that particular spot, traveled at the rate of between six and seven hundred miles an hour. When the convulsions reached the Morro, a rocky precipice lining one side of the harbor, it also began to move. Pieces of from ten to twenty-five tons in weight began to move from their base and fall, altering the whole front view of that part of the coast.

At the same moment the town, being in full view of our informant on board the vessel, commenced to crumble into ruins. The noise, the rumbling like the echoes of thunder, the explosive sounds, like that of firing a heavy battery, are described as terrific and deafening, and the whole soil of the country, so far as could be seen, was moving, first like a wave, in the direction from south to north, then it trembled, and at last it shook heavily, throwing into a heap of ruins two thirds of all the houses in Arica. Men, women and children ran into any open space at hand, and their shrieks and screams could be heard distinctly on board of the shipping; even the Custom House, built of iron, stone and adobe, received a wide crack at this first shock. Among the first houses which tumbled down into a heap of ruins was that of the Prussian Consul, Mr. Euler, and that of the Brown Brothers. Shock followed after shock; in several places openings were becoming visible in the ground and sulphurous vapor issued from them. At this juncture a crowd of people flocked to the mole, seeking the boats, to take refuge on the vessels in the harbor. As yet the shipping in the harbor felt not the least commotion from the disturbance on land.

After the first shock there was a rest. No breeze could be felt; no ripple was seen on the waters. The Water and the Fredonia sent their surgeons ashore to assist the wounded; but the surgeons had hardly landed and but few of the others had entered the boats, when the sea quietly receded from the shore, leaving the boats high and dry on the beach. The water had not receded further than extremely low tide, when Lost Sister Found—A Child Stolen Twenty-Five Years Ago.

One of the strangest incidents of domestic life that ever came under our notice occurred on Tuesday of the present week. The story is thus told: Mrs. Bowen is a widow, forty one years old, whose husband died last year of yellow fever. Thirty years ago, being then only eleven years old, and a resident of Comanche county, Alabama, her eldest sister married and removed to another portion of the same State. The marriage was unhappy; the husband was unkind. The only child of this marriage was a daughter who was stolen from school, and seems to have been reared in almost ignorance of her family. All that we know of the child is that she is now a lady of twenty-nine years, and resides in her native State. About a year since, Judge Dean, of Batts, Dean & Watson, received a letter from this lady, saying that she believed her aunt resided in Galveston, and that she desired to know of her whereabouts. After inquiring he found the missing aunt to be Mrs. Bowen. The ladies were put in communication, and the one in Alabama assured that her mother, from whom she had been stolen, was dead. Thus the matter rested until last Tuesday, when a Mrs. Martin, at the suggestion of a mutual friend, was introduced to and visited Mrs. Bowen. During the conversation that followed it became plain that they were sisters, and that Mrs. Martin was the mother of the Alabama lady that was stolen twenty-five years since. Thus the two met and were recognized after an absence of thirty years, never a strawberry mark on the left arm of either. One sister has been a resident of Galveston fourteen years and the other eight. Both are happy in the meeting and in the prospect of soon seeing the daughter of one and the niece of the other.

Who Ate Roger Williams.

We take the following from Steele's Fourteen Weeks in Chemistry: The truth that matter passes from the animal back to the vegetable, and from the vegetable to the animal kingdom again, received a pious illustration not long since.

For the purpose of erecting a suitable monument in memory of Roger Williams, the founder of Rhode Island, his private burying ground was searched for the graves of himself and wife. It was found that everything had passed into oblivion. The Shape of the coffins could only be traced by a black line of carbonaceous matter. The rusting hinges and nails, and a round wooden knot, alone remained in one grave; while a single lock of braided hair was found in the other. Near the grave stood an apple tree. This had sent down two main roots into the very presence of the confined dead. The larger root, pushing its way to the precise spot occupied by the skull of Roger Williams, had made a turn as if passing around it, and followed the direction of the back bone to the hips. Here it divided into two branches, sending one along each leg to the heels, when both turned upward to the toes. One of these roots, formed a slight crook at the knee, which made the whole bear a striking resemblance to the human form. There were the graves, and their occupants had disappeared; the bones even had vanished. There stood the thief—the guilty apple tree—caught in the very act of robbery. The apologetic was complete. The organic matter, the flesh, the bones of Roger Williams had passed into an apple tree. The elements had been absorbed by the roots, transmuted into fiber, which could now be burned as fuel, or carved into ornaments, had bloomed into fragrant blossoms, which delighted the eye of the passer by, and scattered the sweetest perfume of spring; more than that—has been converted into luscious fruit, which from year to year had been gathered and eaten. How pertinent, then, is the question, "Who ate Roger Williams?"

all at once, on the whole levee of the harbor, it commenced to rise. It appeared at first as if the ground of the shore was sinking, but the mole being carried away the people on the mole were seen floating; the little pagoda used for an office for the captain of the port was also floating, and the water still rose until it reached a height of thirty-four feet above high water mark, and overflowed the town and rushed through the streets, and threw down by the force of its weight what the earthquake had left. And all this rise and overflow of the waters took only about five minutes.

The water rushed back into the ocean more suddenly than it had advanced upon the land, and carried with it the Custom House and the residence of the English Consul. This awful spectacle of destruction by the receding flood had hardly been realized when the sea rose again, and now the vessels in port began dragging. The water rose to the same height as before, and on rushing back it brought not only the debris of a ruined city with it, but even a locomotive and tender and a train of four cars were soon carried away by the fearful force of the waves. During this advance of the sea inland, another terrific shock, lasting about eight minutes, was felt, the thunders of the earth and the storm of the waves surpassing all conception of human endurance. At this time, all around the city the dust formed into clouds, and obscuring the sky, made things on land quite invisible. Just now the persons on ship board in our harbor, believed themselves to be in danger, and some expressed even the thought that the "day of judgement" had at last arrived. It was now about six o'clock on the 13th day of August.

During all this time successive shocks of earthquake, some of longer and some of shorter duration, could be felt and heard. For a while everything remained quiet. A long line of light was observed out to sea, and it was thought that it was a sign of clearing up. This belief lasted only a moment, for the thundering approach of a heavy sea bore was soon noticed, and a minute afterwards a sea wall of perpendicular height, to the extent of from forty-two to forty-five feet, was seen approaching capped on the top with a fringe of bright glittering foam, which had been mistaken for the dawn of quiet.

As instances of the force of the current rushing upon the shores, our informant stated that the heavy columbiads mounted on the battery of San Jose, about two miles north of Arica, were washed away and carried a distance of from five to six hundred yards; the heavy iron columns of the Custom House at Arica, about two tons in weight, were strewn about within a distance of a thousand yards from the building.

Other interesting details were as told by the same gentleman. At one place on the coast the sloping mound of earth was washed away by the current to the extent of about one hundred feet, laying bare the almost perpendicular side of a rock, into which had been hewn niches, and in each niche was found a well preserved Peruvian mummy, one of which has been brought to this country, to be added to the collection of curiosities in the Smithsonian Institute at Washington. A Madan Allico left Arica the morning of the earthquake, on horse-back, and was overtaken on the road by the first shock. The ground opened beneath her, the horse sinking, and burying her up to the hips. The loose sand of the soil saved her, and fourteen hours later she was rescued without injury.

From the 13th to the 19th the shocks continued with comparative short intermissions, and their recurrence gradually lessened, and when our informant left the site of Arica, on the 29th of August, none were felt on that day. The survivors of the inhabitants of the town lived on the hills in tents, which presented a picturesque appearance, being built of calicoes of all shades and patterns, of blankets, and old skirts, and the like. The stench from decomposed human and animal remains was almost insufferable, and a number had been burned, and only four hundred and twenty were buried up to the date he left.

Use of Lemons.

When periodic feverish and thirsty beyond what is natural, indicated in some cases by a metallic taste in the mouth, especially after drinking water, or by a whitish appearance of the greater part of the tongue, one of the best "coolers" internal or external, is to take a lemon, cut off the top, sprinkle over it some fine loaf sugar, work it downward into the lemon with a spoon, and then suck it slowly, squeezing the lemon and adding more sugar as the acidity increases from being brought up from the lower point. Invalids with feverishness may take two or three lemons a day in this manner, with a most marked benefit, manifested by a sense of coolness, comfort and invigoration. A lemon or two taken thus at tea time, as an entire substitute for the ordinary "supper" of Summer, would give many a man a comfortable night's sleep and an awakening of rest and invigoration, with an appetite for breakfast, to which they are strangers who will have their cup of tea or supper "relish" and "cake" and berries or peaches and cream.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Revolutionary Action of the Councils.

Philadelphia, October 29.—The present City Council being opposite in policy to the Mayor elect, to-day passed a bill through one branch, taking from the Mayor that portion of his patronage, viz: the appointment of operatives on the City Telegraph. A bill will be introduced next week, asking the Legislature to take the control of the police force from the Mayor, and vest it in a Commissioner. As the Legislature will be Republican the bill will properly pass.
